Spirit of '40-8' Lives Again for British

The term "40 Hommes—8 Chevaux" lives again as the British Tommies in photo above move to the front in France's famous box cars. Thousands of American Legionnaires commemorate war experiences with "40 and 8" societies. In both London and Paris, meantime, spokesmen gave a flat "No" to Nazi peace gestures based on elimination of Poland and backed by vague threats of a supposed Nazi-Soviet war alliance.

Reveals Spy Setup

Testifying "the ink was hardly dry" on the American recognition of the soviet union in 1933 before a Russian secret agent was assigned to his New York office, Dr. David H. Dubnowsky, former American representative of the Russian Red Cross, is shown before the Dies committee in Washington, DC.

Yellowed Confederate Paper Found; 1862 "Extra" Foresees Yankee Defeat

"The success which followed the Northern standard in its insolent march of invasion, but a short time since so uniform, seems at last exhausted. So starts the lead article of an "extra" of the Vidette, publication of Colonel John Morgan's Confederate brigade, for August 19, 1862, which J. W. Gilmer, 2483 Center street, recently found among possessions of his father, Ira W. Gilmer, who died in July.

The Vidette, published "semi-occasionally," told of a "brilliant victory by Stonewall Jackson, at the Culpepper Court House, or Rapidan, and the swallowing up of the entire Federal army at Cumberland Gap..."

Another old paper, "The Albion (Michigan) Weekly Mirror," which Gilmer found, was not so greatly concerned with the war. Its news of the "war in Virginia" was limited to a column on an inside page.

The Michigan paper's policy was apparently decidedly pro-South and anti-abolitionist. Space was given on the front page to reprints of editorials from The Louisville Journal condemning President Lincoln.

American Freedom not Appreciated - Speaker Thompson Tells Kiwanians

Professor R. F. Thompson of Willamette university was the main speaker on the noon program at the Kiwanis club meeting at the Marion hotel yesterday.

Professor Thompson in his address sought to emphasize the freedom which is the American citizen's right, and to which he ordinarily pays little open attention, with the lack of personal freedom of this kind enjoyed by citizens of totalitarian states abroad.

"American men are not aware of the great freedom which is theirs," he quoted an acquaintance from Austria as saying following her exile from there. He cited another incident when a German youth with whom he walked in Heidelberg remarked on his desire to live in a land of personal freedom such as America.

Two new Houses To Go up Here

Permits for erection of dwellings were given yesterday to M. J. Arnold, to erect a one story house at 345 River street at a cost of $1750 and to Floyd Volke, to erect a 1 1/2 story dwelling at 1504 Jefferson street to cost $3600.

25 Year Maps Show Highway Growth of State System Since 1914 Is Told on New Charts

Maps showing the progress of road construction in Oregon and Washington during the 25-year period from 1914 to 1939, were released from the Oregon state highway commission here Tuesday.

In 1914 there were approximately 1000 miles of partially improved roads on projected state highway routes in Oregon. Of these 1000 miles, not more than 20 miles were paved. There are now 7000 miles of improved roads in the Oregon highway system.

Of the improved roads, 4500 miles are paved or oiled and 2000 miles are surfaced with well-maintained rock or gravel surfacing. There were 16,347 motor vehicles in Oregon in 1914 and 265,000 in 1939.

Counties Provide Funds
In 1914, funds for state highway construction and maintenance were provided in the main by the counties. State funds then devoted to that work aggregated only about $250,000 a year, which was derived from a quarter mill property tax.

In 1939, the funds for state highway construction and maintenance are provided by the state and federal governments. The total is approximately $14,000,000 a year. The total cost of state highway improvement work performed during the 5-year period exceeds $160,000,000. During the same period $49,000 was expended in maintaining the state highways.

Work was obtained for 5763 persons through the Salem office of the state employment service during September, the monthly report released yesterday by Manager D. L. McBain shows.
