The Pacifist Viewpoint

The two opposing camps on the neutrality question—the one favoring retention of the arms embargo and the other its repeal—both contain in almost equal proportions laborers and business men, republicans and democrats, conservatives and liberals, people from both sides of the fence in almost every pre-established dichotomy based upon opposition of ideologies—with one exception.

Practically all of the people who have been out-and-out pacifists since World War I are lined up against repeal of the embargo. But since nearly everybody is pacifist to the extent of deploring war, the term will have to be more specifically defined. The fellow we call a pacifist is the one who thinks it takes only one to make a peace; who deplores preparedness even for defense, contending that the nation which arms itself is heading toward war; who would sacrifice every other consideration to avoid war; who believes logic and calm reasoning and brotherly love can prevail in this present day to maintain peace.

It might be supposed that the pacifists would be in eclipse, in view of what is happening in Europe. On the contrary they are still active even in Europe, except in the totalitarian countries. Here in the United States they are active and vocal, but have narrowed their argument to a nationalistic one; that the United States can keep out of war by accepting their formula.

The writer was privileged to sit the other night through an exposition of this viewpoint which apparently incorporated the full case for pacifism and for isolationism. It may be fairly outlined, we assume—and we are trying to be fair—as follows:

The United States got into World War I through this chain of events: (1) Industrial expansion to fill allied war orders at huge profits to the industrialists; (2) Private loans to keep those orders coming after the allies ran out of cash; (3) Evidence of impending defeat for the allies which would have meant a loss to these private lenders and (4) Intervention at their behest, brought about through their influence at Washington and their control of propaganda which inspired a popular hysteria for "making the world safe for democracy." Now for the solution: Since all this happened in 1914-17, the only way to keep it from happening again is to avoid the first link in the chain, the industrial expansion to fill war orders.

The pro-embargo speaker dealt in impressive figures on the profits of war and suggested that America's "real enemies" both in peacetime and in wartime were the men who made these profits; and the casual listener might have missed the two weak points in his argument.

The speaker is a youth in the 20's; he was not around when World War I broke out. If he knows, he knows only by hearsay, what the feeling was in April, 1917; how strong and how nearly unanimous was the sentiment for intervention. True, it was hysteria; and true again, it was mistaken—the idea that the United States could right Europe's inbred wrongs. But it was honest sentiment and it was honest error—and based only to a minor degree upon propaganda. The people saw pretty clearly what the English were fighting for, and their sympathy was principally for the English. Their error was two-fold; a belief that our own selfish interests coincided with England's interests, and a belief that a victory could be followed by a just and lasting peace.

So the first fallacy in the argument is that the people were completely hoodwinked, and the second is that history is bound to repeat itself, which implies (1) that the people could be hoodwinked again by the same ruse and (2) that the big industrialists and financiers' interests would be such that they would again seek to force the United States into war.

The truth is that business, big and little, will fight to the last ditch to keep the United States out of war, no matter how it lines up on the embargo. Why? Because business knows it will be regimented if this country does enter the war, and so regulated that profits will be slim and uncertain. And business, fearful these last few years of regimentation even in the absence of war, would be deathly afraid that, once under government control in wartime, it would never regain its freedom again.

Thus the pacifist line of reasoning breaks down entirely. Nevertheless from the standpoint of economics rather than neutrality, it would be stupid folly to encourage too pronounced a war boom in this country—and especially a boom which we would finance ourselves by lending money and credit to belligerents. The unpaid debts of World War I stand as a bulwark against repetition of this mistake; but The Statesman persists in its contention that in the neutrality bill amendments, "cash" should mean just that, and that loans to private firms or individuals in belligerent countries should be forbidden along with loans to the governments.

In the final analysis it is sympathy for the democracies and not greed for profit which might cause us to let down the credit bars, and it is the same sympathy which might lead us into actual participation—sympathy plus the mistaken notion that our own security is tied up with theirs. It is at this point that we must erect our psychological Maginot line.

Deer Editor: Deer, Deer!

Drive around Salem's residence district one of these medium nippy mornings and if you'll turn up a quiet side street that slopes to the east, chances are pretty good that you'll encounter a dog sunning himself on the pavement. Hunt up all the quiet streets that slope to the east and you may find dogs snoozing on more than half of them. A bit of analysis will tell you why—but without the analysis it would appear to be one of those mysteries surrounding the habits of dumb critters.

It has been more than a week since this column discussed the matter of eastern Oregon mule deer, and several days since our esteemed local contemporary essayed to refute some of our conclusions. One of its contentions was that though the open season on "antlerless deer" in Grant county was decreed by the legislature, the bill was sponsored by the game commission. Getting the low-down on that matter was what delayed our response, but now we have it. Lew Wallace, former game commission member and chairman of the senate game committee, reveals in a letter that the bill was sponsored by Grant county residents and adds:

"While before the Legislature for consideration, an attempt was made to secure the approval of the State Game Commission. 'I understand that the Commission advised that the bill should stand on its merits, and whether it should be approved or defeated, was a matter which the Legislature alone should decide.'"

Does that dispose of item No. 1? Next, the Capital Journal argued that the bill in question was not arbitrary, but merely permitted the game commission to declare an open season if it saw fit. Let's read the bill:

"Section 3. In order to accomplish the aims and purposes above mentioned, it shall be lawful for any regularly licensed hunter, during the period from September 20 to October 25 of the years 1939 and 1940, to kill two mule deer in the above described area; provided, however, that one of said deer must be a deer with forked horns and one of said deer must be a doe or antlerless deer."

Where is the "permissive" feature in that section? It is true that in a following section the game commission is empowered to hold hearings after the close of the 1939 season and if it sees fit, to forbid the killing of antlerless deer in the 1940 season.

And finally the Capital Journal objected to our contention that every child in Oregon knows the mule deer is not suited to the climate of western Oregon. Proving that what every child knows is actually true, might have involved ex-

kind to first white settlers here: what the Willamette project will do:

(Continuing from yesterday.)
Edwards wrote that petition in the first little log house of the Lee mission—which stood a few feet south of where the monument stands; its site shown by the cellar hole still there. Some brief excerpts from the petition follow:
"Our interests are identified with the country of our adoption. We flatter ourselves that we are the germ of a great state, and are anxious to give an early tone to the moral and intellectual character of the citizens. . . . The destinies of our posterity will be intimately affected by the character of those who immigrate to the country. The territory must populate. The congress of the United States must say by whom. . . . By the reckless and unprincipled adventurer, by the Botany Bay refugee, the wanderer from South America, the deserting seaman, or by our own hardy and enterprising pioneers. . . . The products of our fields have to be simply justified the most flattering descriptions of the fertility of the soil. . . ."

"A large portion of the territory from the Columbia river south to the boundary line between the United States and the Mexican republic, and extending from the coast of the Pacific about 250 or 300 miles to the interior, is either well supplied with timber or adapted to pasturage or agriculture."

"The fertile valleys of the Willamette and Umpqua are varied with prairies and woodland, and intersected by abundant lateral streams, presenting facilities for machinery. (Meaning for water powers.)"

"Perhaps no country of the same latitude is favored with a climate so mild."

"The winter rains, it is true, are an objection; but they are generally preferred to the snows and intense cold which prevail in the northern parts of the United States."

"The ground is seldom covered with snow, nor does it ever remain but a few hours."

That petition was "signed by every member of the Jason Lee mission"—the original band who came in 1834 and the two reinforcements of 1837; "by 17 other American citizens," nearly the total number then in the country and "by nine French Canadians who desired to become American citizens." (The wives and other women members of the mission did not sign—only the men.)

The French Canadians who signed were: John B. Deportes, Joseph Gervais, Xavier Ladrot, Baptiste DeLoar, Pierre Bellique, Andre Picard, Joseph DeLoar, Jean Perrault and Etienne Lucier. No doubt Joseph DeLoar was a son of Baptiste, and thus one of the first half white children born in the Oregon country.

The 36 men, 10 missionaries, 17 other American citizens, and eight French Canadians and one native born son of a French Canadian—the nine wishing to become Americans—those 36 men knew what they were signing
