Probate Judge Orders Briefs

Validity of Claim for Commission Point at Law In Case at Bar

Probate Judge J. C. Sigmund ordered submission of briefs by both sides after hearing arguments in the matter of the claim for $200 compensation advanced by Charles H. Sanders against the estate of Carl Lanke for services allegedly rendered in connection with the sale of real property at about the time of Lanke's death last April.

According to preliminary remarks of attorneys, the central point at issue is the continuing validity of an option after the death of its giver, and in particular the power of the giver's agent to agree to an acceptance of the option when he is in ignorance of the prior death of his principal.

Testimony of witnesses centered about events last spring when Sanders alleges that Lanke asked him to find a buyer for 10 acres of land on the Turner road, and Sanders reported that he had found persons willing to purchase the land.

During the transaction, however, when the buyer, Grace E. Lang, had taken possession of the property but was merely in receipt of an option to buy it, Lanke died. Thereafter the buyer herself decided to leave the property, and it reverted back to the Lanke heirs as a result of signed agreement. The question at issue, which will be decided by the judge on the basis of counsel's briefs, is the validity of Sanders' claim to compensation for a completed sale.

All's Quiet on This Street

This Finnish street is almost deserted. And there's a reason. The street is in Vilpuri, a thriving seaport within 30 miles of the Soviet border. More than 50,000 persons have been evacuated from it since the Russo-Finnish crisis became acute.

News Behind Today's News

By PAUL MALLON

without public attention being drawn to them.

State department, for instance, has just emerged from a legal snarl which has held back shipments of planes for the British. Not a plane has yet been shipped, they say here (although information regarding the shipments will be concealed because of their military value.)

Departmental lawyers found it would be a violation of law for anyone to fly British or French-bought ships over US soil. American manufacturers could fly them to ports of embarkation, but they did not want to because they would have to foot insurance as well as transportation costs. They will have to suffer, under the system now worked out. Under it they will probably fly most of the deliveries to the American side of a Canadian border field, where title will pass, as the planes are hauled across the border.

This legal difficulty was not unworkable to Britain, France, or Canada. Under the state department ruling, Hitler will be prevented from getting any planes under the so-called neutrality act because he will not be able to get delivery. Until this, he could legally have bought bombers here, flown them away to a sea rendezvous where they could have been loaded with bombs, in close range to Canadian ports to have made bombing feasible.

About one-third of the allied plane purchases are long range bombers, and conceivably could be flown across the ocean from Halifax—but few will be. State department can not stretch the shipping bill sufficiently to let American pilots take the trans-Atlantic taxi jobs. Furthermore North Atlantic weather in winter is not encouraging. There has been talk about the British stationing aircraft carriers on the route so they can fly all their planes over, including the short range pursuit ships, but this hardly will be attempted. Stationary aircraft carriers would be forked meat for the German submarine sharks.

Morse Foresees Better Relations

Coast Arbitrator in Labor Disputes Is Chamber of Commerce Speaker

The rank and file of organized labor is becoming better informed about the economic factors involved in labor-employer differences and for this reason there is hope for more amicable relations in the future, Dean Wayne L. Morse of the University of Oregon law school, who is Pacific coast arbitrator under the longshoremen's contract, declared in an address at the Salem chamber of commerce luncheon Monday.

The uniting of employers has also helped to bring about more responsibility in labor relations, Dean Morse said. Now it becomes the duty of the public to keep informed on the facts in each separate labor dispute, he added, asserting that many persons have been too ready to decide all labor questions, in their own minds, in just one way.

Arbitration is the last resort prior to the use of economic force, which is the right of either labor or employers after arbitration has failed, the speaker said. He differentiated between arbitration, which is a judicial procedure and permits of no compromise, and mediation and conciliation which admits of any procedure which will enable the parties to agree.

Dean Morse explained that his post as arbitrator has to do only with the longshoremen's contract, although he was called in to settle some difficulties in the San Francisco dock clerks' labor troubles some months ago. He has no jurisdiction in the present deadlock between the clerks and their employers, which he described as a situation of serious import to the entire Pacific coast, though not a hopeless one.

Eastman of Berkeley, Calif., and Mrs. John Thompson of West Salem.

Salem Markets Have Plenty of Turkeys on Hand

Salem markets are plentifully supplied with turkeys for the Thanksgiving holiday proclaimed by President Roosevelt. They are selling from 24 to 27 cents a pound in retail shops, the price depending on the size and quality of the bird.

Most in demand so far have been the smaller birds, young hens, weighing from 9 to 15 pounds and costing the most per pound. Toms usually run from 12 to 20 pounds and cost less money than the hens.

Whether the tom turkey or the hen is the better flavored bird is a matter of taste, Salem markets insist. But turkeys are big this season and the toms are too big for the average family. This accounts for the popularity among buyers of the hen bird this year.
