

New Scio Well Brings Water

Drillers Reach 200 Feet in Two Weeks; Supply Believed Adequate

SCIO—Depth of 200 feet has been reached in the new Scio city well on the northwest outskirts of the city, and it is believed an adequate supply of water has been attained. Drilling has been in progress less than two weeks.

"Surface water" at 6 to 10 feet, a large flow at 97 feet, and several more ample intakes were encountered, according to the log of the well.

Perforating the casing, installed as drilling progressed, and swabbing of the well will soon be completed. Council is calling for bids for erection of a pump house, and installation of additional mains from the new well. The bids to be opened December 22. Council also expects to ask for an extension of time from PWA authorities, stating that the present limit, January 13, is impossible time for completion.

Cost of the project, partly financed by the San Francisco PWA office, will be about $4,500, including the drilling. Another new well in south Scio was abandoned by the city because of insufficient and impure water.

Explorer Speaks At Normal School

Shows Moving Pictures of Colorado River Trip, Mt. Angel

MT. ANGEL—Amos Burg, a distinguished member of the Explorers' Club of America and a native Portlander, spoke before students and faculty members of Mt. Angel Normal school on December 5.

Showing several reels of the moving pictures which have made him nationally known as a camera artist and speaking in a charming, sincere manner, Burg told his listeners of his recent trip down the length of the Colorado river, which is considered one of the most daring achievements of modern exploration.

Along with Buzz Holmstrom of Coquille and another photographer, the adventurer-photographer filmed the dramatic Colorado from its source to its mouth. In specially constructed boats, being piloted by Bernado of the trio rushed through 18 roaring canyons, including the Grand canyon.

Wide Traveler Since he was 13 the northwest's most noted explorer has been in the midst of adventures which have made him a valued member of the National Geographic society. For the society he has made expert pictorial surveys of Alaska, Oregon and England. He has worked with the ichthyologist, Dr. William Bebbe of Bernado. Both polar regions, the South Sea islands, the Orient, Australia, all have been visited by the smiling explorer and his high speed camera.

Burg's visit to Mt. Angel was arranged by the Rev. John Cummins, OSB. In January he will leave for the east to fulfill a number of lecture engagements. He will lecture at Constitution hall, Washington, DC, for the eighth time.
