But here I am, ready to give you the "busts" of the year. What you do with them is immaterial to me, FDR, Sir Nev-ille, the French Foreign Legion, L'il Abner, or the society for the prevention of passing fancies, which come in assorted colors and are priced within easy range of any good dollar.

Wile you may have been laboring under the illusion (the one lost by Mephistopheles in about 159 and found after the Wall street crash of 1929) that the best bust of the year was Challedon's, inasmuch as it was generally to the tape first, I'm afraid I'm going to have to disillusion you. It's a painless process, however, and guaranteed to leave you with no distress other than a ringing in the ears that will subside anon, just when you're get ting used to it.

Challedon's probably wasn't even the biggest bust of the year. That (and it's true dimensions have not yet come to light, even in this day of the searchlight, the floodlight and the light fantastic), was probably staged by "In-One-Ear's" Tuesday or any other night society one otherwise dismal evening last October.

Nope, (with the accent on the "o", the biggest bust of 1939, to needs a "housecleaning." Two Baseball Flops.

Wooderson, allegedly loons by one of the Rideout twins, who, along with Archie San Romani and Glen Cunningham were supposed to have pressed the Englishman to a new record on the fast Princeton track, finished, instead, far back in the pack. That indeed was a floperoo. One that had no peer as a bust during the

Baseball busts of the year in-cluded Johnny "No-No" Vander Meer, the Cincinnati chucker who in '38 turned in two no-no performances to make him the most talked-of tosser in Doubleday's little game, and Freddie Hutchinson, the Seattle boy for whom the Detroit Tigers were reported to have paid out a cold, or warm, if you'd rather have it that way,

Vander Meer not only didn't live up to expectations, but it was a rarity when he finished a game. Hutchinson, who had won 27 and lost five with Seattle the year before, spent only enough time with the Tigers for them to find out he wouldn't do 'em any good—this year, at

Biggest disappointment along the hoof-for-dough trail was undoubtedly El Chico, the two-yearold colt given the old rave a year back by all the folks with hosssense. Well, along came an oatburner named Johnstown, practically unheralded, to win the derby, and El Chico, who may or may not have finished yet (there Jerry Gastineau's fast-stepping seem to be conflicting reports), hasn't been heard of since. -0-

Football Generally Free.

Football was generally pretty free of flops, unless they develop in the bowl businesses yet to Backbone 35 come, but in this connection there | Scalpcane, 2 were two notable elevens. There was Chicago, the team that made | Van Pelt 14 the Big Ten famous, and Reed college of Bortland, the team that made itself its own laughingstock by negotiating an undefeated, untied season in spite of a de-emphasized athletic program.

While in all fairness neither Willamette's or Salem high's grid season could be termed an outright "bust," (as the word is defined almost everywhere but in the dressmakers' shops), but in the dressmakers' shops), it is true both bordered on the "floppy." Any time Willamette fails to win the Northwest conference championship, it is, for all historical purposes, a calamity, and any time Salem high is nipped in such nasty fashion by Albany's Bulldogs, it becomes stark tragedy.

You don't have to go far afield to find the year's biggest local bust, but you do have to go out of the sports field even though it be distasteful to leave such a lush, clover-covered meadow. Just take the first turn to your left, lope three blocks, trot one and side-step the fifth. You're now in the heart of Salem's downtown area, where you can't get any farther because of the double-parking sys-tem in vogue. This year it is even a bigger bust than it has been, so he natives swear, for the past 10

With the year's "busts" now nicely in hand, we'll try to bring you, before January 1, the year's "bests." But don't break your neck looking for
