

Smelly Films Are Invented

Swiss Scientists Patent Way to Make Odors for Movies

BERNE—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—Two Swiss inventors have turned out an automatic, electrically operated contraption whereby motion picture films will carry not only a sound track but a "smell" track.

They call their invention the "odorated talking picture," and it's just that. During a recent private demonstration in Bern they produced twenty smells synchronized with sound and sight for their sniffing audience. When her heroine walked through a field of violets the hall was filled with the scent of violets.

When she was rushed to the hospital following an accident the audience smelt the ether.

Phoey! What's Burning
When the hero sped to her aid in a racing car something like the odor of hot brake bands was in the air.

And when they were finally married the scent of orange blossoms made everything hunky-dory.

"Think of it," exploded one of the enthusiastic inventors, "men sit together in a hotel lobby smoking cigars and the smell of them is in the hall. Then—puff!—Garbo walks in and the smoke smell vanishes for the scent of her ravishing perfume!"

The inventors claim they can produce no less than 5000 separate smells with their odorator although they don't advise any one to try and put them all on one film. That, even they agree, would be too much for the public's nose.

Ten's Enough

They figure that the smells should be reserved for the best moments of the film; perhaps about ten to a feature length picture.

At the demonstration they showed that modern air conditioning will permit one odor to be washed away before the other odor arrives.

Their apparatus requires no operator and works automatically on the "smell track" of the odorated film. Only trace of the odor in the motion picture theatre is a faint hissing noise audible only close to the "odor vents."

The cost of installing the odoriferous contraption, say the inventors, is well below the cost of installing sound equipment in motion picture theaters.

Monkeys Get out For "Maisie" Film

The only aquatic monkey house in Hollywood wins a role in the movie. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's old river boat, which has been used in jungle pictures since Clark Gable and Jean Harlow starred in "Red Dust," has been the home of the studio monkeys for the past two years.

Despite the chattering protest of the ring-tailed horde, they were evicted when the boat won a screen role in "Congo Maisie," Ann Sothern's second Maisie role in which she is teamed with John Carroll at the Capitol theatre.

The boat plied a jungle river and the monkeys returned to their tree-top homes in the studio jungle. "Congo Maisie" was directed by H. C. Potter from a story by Wilson Collison. Featured with Sothern and Carroll are Rita Johnson and Shepperd Strudwick.

60 Gobs Stand by While One Scrubs

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 10.—(P)—Sixty cheery sailors stand poised to start scrubbing the deck of a battleship, safely anchored on a sound stage.
But Director Allen Dwan steps out with an order to clean the deck behind the bluejackets, making it appear scrubbed.
A small assistant propman goes to work with a broom.
"Come on, come on," frets Dwan. "We're wasting money." The prop man puts on speed, while the 60 sailors stand by, leaning hard on their brooms and offering advice.
They couldn't help if they wanted to. They don't belong to the right union.

Rosalind Gets All the Scenes

Star of "His Girl Friday" Absent in Only 13 of Film Sequences

Rosalind Russell still wonders whether 13 is a lucky number. The lovely young actress, currently starred with reckless Cary Grant at the Grand theatre in "His Girl Friday," is NOT present in only 13 of the 40 scene sequences of the hectic new romantic comedy!

Of the 13 scenes in which she does not appear, more than half are mere flashes establishing characters or background and entailing little or no dialogue. Something of a record in continuous appearances, the lovely actress also established a Hollywood mark when, during one scene, she spoke 681 words into a telephone without a pause. The scene runs for three minutes; it required hours of preparation.

The amazing monopoly of camera attention "enjoyed" by Miss Russell meant that she had to be on the set every day, with no free time from production. Grant, and Ralph Bellamy, who plays a leading featured role, both managed to put in several days of fishing while waiting for Hawks to catch up to scenes in which they were supposed to appear.

Cagney Whips Big Allen Hale

"Fighting 69th" Star Is Winner in Rough Go With 240-Pounder

One of the oldest axioms of the boxing ring, that a good little man can whip a good big man, or the taller they are the farther they have to fall and the more noise they make, was proved in "The Fighting 69th," now showing at the Elsinore theatre.

James Cagney, 140 pounds, knocked 240-pound Alan Hale sprawling by a slight miscalculation of distance in a roue rough and tumble fight scene for the picture at the Warner Bros. studio during production. It was 10 minutes before Hale recovered breath and dignity enough for the scene to be continued. And he still has to be convinced that Jimmy didn't plan it.

The fight climaxed a long verbal build up between Cagney, a cocky private, and Hale, a burly sergeant, that had been running all through the first part of the picture. Going into the scene, director William Kelghey naturally wanted to make it look real.

"There's so much difference between you two in size and weight that the audience won't believe it unless you look rather awkward, Alan," he instructed. "So you swing wild at first and you, Jimmy, pretend to be pounding him in the solar plexus. Just swing in close and it will look okay for the camera. But don't get hurt, either of you."

Half way through the fight (and it was looking better every second) Jimmy cut loose with a short sharp right upper cut. He happened to time it just as Hale was reaching out with a looping left jab. Cagney's right won't Jimmy's punch, with his shoulder behind it, caught Hale right in the middle. With a "woof" that made the microphone dance, Hale sat down, but suddenly.

It was 10 minutes before he got back on his feet, but in the finished film it's merely a matter of a split second.

If It Isn't "Oomph" Maybe It's "Glex"

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 10.—(P)—The publicity boys, hard-pressed for a word to "sell" that indefinable something which makes Lana Turner the current college boys' joy, come forth with "Glex."

The originator, they say, is S. Sylvan Simon, director, who opines:

"Glex" isn't glamorous, in the accepted sense of the word. High school and college students don't understand glamour. They might admire it, but it's something to look at from a distance. On the other hand, it isn't sex appeal. It's a happy combination of the two, without baffling complexities.

"So, girls, if you haven't 'it,' or 'oomph,' maybe 'Glex' will fit."
