On Lenten

In homes where Lent is observed, housewives are shaken from their usual menu planning channel into a quest for new foods. Fruits in canned, dried, fresh and liquified form are receiving more than their usual attention. The liquified fruits, known as whole-fruit nectars, are comparatively new, to be selected in any of the five deciduous fruit varieties-apricot, peach-nectarine, pear, plum and peach. Each one is a pleasing combination of finely crushed fruit pulp and juice smoothly blended together into a Use ripe banana, force through delightful beverage. Cheese salads, along with other meat substitutes, are getting the spotlight this Lenten season. A particularly tasty cottage cheese salad is made with a nectar base. Select the peach-nectarine variety or any other you might prefer. Use two tablespoons of plain gelatin in the usual manner, for molding one can of nectar. Add lemon juice and salt to bring out the flavor. Stir in a cup of cottage

If foregoing candy, cake or sweets is a part of the Lenten season program, you'll be turning again and again to fruits as a dessert substitute. Before Easter arrives you'll be drinking fruit as whole-fruit nectars. These delightful juicy drinks in cans contain all the fruit with only the skins and seeds removed. Serve them to yourself either hot or cold whenever you feel a yearning for self-denied sweets.
