Rogers Action Is Dismissed

Case Against Earl Snell Over UCC Audit Fails in Circuit Court

Efforts of Emmet T. Rogers to force drastic alteration of accounting methods in the state unemployment compensation commission through legal action were rendered fruitless yesterday by Circuit Judge L. G. Lewelling when he dismissed the case of Rogers vs. Earl Snell as secretary of state, and declared that a companion case of Rogers vs. the unemployment commission would eventually have to be dismissed.

The complaint against the secretary of state had sought to force audit of the accounts of the unemployment compensation commission for the period 1935 to March 22, 1939, by the division of audits of the secretary of state's office.

The judgment dismissing the case was made on the ground that such an audit has already been made, and that the matter now was merely a moot question. The court declared that the unemployment commission, which sought to force the commission to set up separate accounting for each employer contributing in accordance with law, had not yet reached a point where it might be dismissed, but that a motion to strike which was upheld would finally eliminate the cause of action from it.

Chubbies and coats at Hagers. Delzell Commissioned—Oregon national guard appointments announced here yesterday include the commissioning as second lieutenant of William A. Delzell, formerly of Salem.

Some Still Register—County Clerk U. G. Boyer reported yesterday that 12 registrations had been made since the registration books were reopened after the primary election, but that in each case the registrant had merely changed party.

Keach Named to Board—George Keach, Stayton, was appointed to take the place of John H. Porter, deceased, on the county road viewing board yesterday by the county court. The court also reappointed Warren Gray as a member of the county fair board.

How 'Chute "Blitz" Gunners Gain Vantage Points

Lightning-like mobility of Germany's parachute troops, which enables nazis to strike suddenly and simultaneously at several points, is graphically pictured in Radiophoto from Berlin. A machine gun crew has just been dropped from a plane (note tangled 'chute ropes) and, once again on solid ground, they hasten to carry their weapon to a vantage point. 'Chute thrills over, their real job then begins.—IIN photo.

Five Skeletons Found by Willamette Students in Calapooya Mounds; one Estimated Three Hundred Years old

Willamette university students on Saturdays during recent weeks have excavated over 200 cubic yards of earth in two mounds located near Harrisburg, in a search for skeletal remains of the Calapooya tribe of Indians. The expeditions have been led by William Laughlin, student curator of the university museum.

Five complete skeletons are the principal finds in the mounds. The oldest of these, estimated to be 300 years old, was on the bottom of the mound, which is about six feet high. Remains of two adult males, two children about nine years of age and one baby were uncovered.

The group dug eight trenches and took out a minimum of 1875 cubic feet of earth. The smallest excavation was about 35 cubic feet and the largest approximately 810.

The mounds were first tapped about five years ago and a skeleton taken from one, which had yielded three other sets of bones to a previous collector. Eight trips were taken this year, the digging parties consisting of from three to 15 students. Six of the trips were profitable from a discovery standpoint and all from a view of knowledge obtained, according to Laughlin.

Obsidian Chippings Found Located on opposite sides of a slough, which once formed a part of a flowing stream, the mounds are now covered with a thick growth of brush and small trees. The larger is approximately 80 by 134 feet. The tribe had camped along the stream and Laughlin says that former habitation on the mounds themselves is evidenced in fire levels and obsidian chippings found throughout.

The mounds were formed by scooping from the stream bed earth to cover the bodies. All the skeletons were found near the bottom of the mound, though some nearer the outside, indicating more recent burial. They were on their sides in a prenatal position, with knees up under the chin and heads to the east, probably indicating a belief in some form of after-life.

The more recent had a necklace of copper beads which had started to corrode. Another, a boy of about nine, wore a necklace of shells from California.

One Unusually Large One of the adult skeletons was of huge build for the Calapooya tribe, according to Laughlin. It was about 5 feet, 6 inches tall. The presence of the shells and the large bones was unexplained.

Subject matter accumulated during the expeditions is now being written up and Laughlin hopes to publish it soon. He was one of two students who in the summer of 1932 accompanied Dr.

State election bureau officials said the canvass of the primary election returns was now in progress and probably would be completed within the next month. It was not expected that the official canvass would change the results in any of the state or district contests.

Potatoes Missed By Diggers now Being Harvested Klamath county has resumed its potato harvest where it left last fall. L. C. Stoll, director of state employment offices, reported yesterday.

Stoll said a half dozen men had been sent to harvest potatoes at the Zuckerman ranch on lower Klamath lake. Investigation showed that diggers last fall didn't go deep enough, leaving potatoes which threatened to grow as volunteers this spring.
