Science Too Far Ahead?

Orville Wright, who never lived at Sublimity though his father did, is reported to be somewhat embarrassed over the use to which his invention, the airplane, is being put some 30-odd years after he and his brother Wilbur made their first flights. Today it has become the most deadly weapon of destruction ever known to mankind.

Misgivings have also been expressed recently by a famous scientist, Dr. Paul de Kruif, as to the possible results 100 people there. At least half of the atom-splitting achievement of Dr. E. O. One difficulty, it may be argued, is that once the inventor or physical scientist has done his work, any ordinary man is capable of appropriating the results to his own use, wheres though the social scientist may "know all the answers," putting them into practice in a free society entails their acceptance by the majority.
