Family Book Shelf

The excitement of high school graduation is closely followed by the natural question "What next?" For many it means going to work, and for others it means college next fall. For all graduates it calls for a momentous decision demanding careful consideration. Just as the public library has helped Salem boys and girls to high school graduation, the library now stands ready to help answer this question of "What next?"

For those contemplating further schooling the library provides current catalogues of the country's leading colleges and universities. Before going to college the choice of a vocation is desirable. Boys and girls with interest in medical study will want to read "Medical Occupations for Boys," or "Medical Occupations for Girls," both by Lee M. Kliefelder. In addition there are many other books on the choice of a profession, such as engineering, law, teaching, librarianship, finance, art and business.

For the high school graduate contemplating immediate employment, there are valuable aids to the important matter of selection of a vocation. To better understand what is expected of the applicant for a position in any kind of business one can read "Your Career in Business" by Walter Hoving, a new and practical book by the president of Lord & Taylor in New York. The best aid to career selection published is the series called "Vocational Guidance Monographs." The library has over one hundred of these monographs on as many vocations.

A book which has been successfully used all over the United States by well known vocational counselors is "Vocations for Girls." This book discusses possible occupations and states qualifications for success in thirty-eight vocations.

High school graduates are having much advice heaped upon them at this time. The public library now comes forward with the offer to help sift this advice and thus assist in an intelligent decision about what to do with the past twelve years of schooling.
