Other Units Arriving in England; New Policy Is Made Apparent

 off of France's third city, Lyon.
 Two strong German columns converged on Lyon—one from the Swiss frontier to the northeast, the other past Nevers, to the northwest.
 Along the Swiss frontier, the French said, the battlefront is too confused for a clear picture of what has happened. Resistance there was described as probably "very weak."
 In general, however, the French were fighting in an attempt to pull their forces together as they were driven southward against the Mediterranean, the Pyrenees border of Spain and the Atlantic.
 They still had about half of their territory in which to fight, and a military commentator tonight said that although the armies were fighting as isolated groups, "each nevertheless has conserved its cohesion of maneuver in retreat."
 The French said their weary troops had delivered a "new battle" against the enemy on the middle Loire before withdrawing "on orders."
 Maginot troops which had not yet escaped from the German jaws in Lorraine were described as forming square formations, which were devised in Flanders, to beat off mechanized and motorized enemy attacking them from east, north and west. These troops were attempting to cut their way through to join main armies to the south.
 In the region west of the Vosges other French troops were fighting southward, foot by foot.

BUCHAREST, June 20

(Thursday) — (AP) Government circles received reports today that a large number of Russian troops are being transferred from the Bessarabian frontier with Rumania to the German-Russian border.
 These circles said more Russian troops were being concentrated on the frontier in Russian Poland opposite the frontier with German-protected Slovakia.
 German motorized columns are being sent to East Prussia, opposite the Baltic states where Rumania recently sent huge forces in a military occupation, it was reported.
 (Unconfirmed reports of East German troop movements in East Prussia also have been circulated in the Baltic states.)

Excess Profit Levy Is Added

War Profit Tax Also Is Inserted but House May not Concur

 study by both the house ways and means and the senate finance committee. The conference group will meet tomorrow or Friday.
 Connally's war profits levy was adopted, 51 to 28, as a substitute for a similar amendment offered by Senator Bone (D-Wash). Connally said it had been worked out by treasury experts and would put the country on a "pay-as-you-go" basis automatically at the outbreak of war.
 The excess profits tax, which would go into effect along with the higher income and excise taxes provided by the bill to finance defense expenditures, was adopted by a surprise vote of 41 to 31.
 The amendment was sponsored by Senator LaFollette (Prog-Wis), who told the senate it would "be a sham and a delusion" to enact revenue legislation which contained no levy on excess profits.
 LaFollette said his proposal would reach those corporations benefitting from the new defense program. Chairman Harrison (D-Miss) of the finance committee and others urged that such legislation be delayed until congress can consider a new tax bill—a step which Harrison predicted would be taken shortly. Harrison said he hoped excess profits taxes would be written law by Jan. 1.
 The LaFollette amendment, imposing taxes similar to those in effect between 1917 and 1922, would grant corporations specific exemptions on profits and then would impose special excess profits levies. A corporation would have a flat exemption of $3,000 plus an additional exemption equal to 5 per cent of its invested capital.
 A corporation with $100,000 capital thus would have a total exemption of $13,000.
 Profits in excess of the exemptions but not in excess of an amount equal to 20 per cent of invested capital would be taxed 28 per cent. Profits in excess of the exemptions and exceeding 20 per cent of invested capital would be taxed 46 per cent.
 Earlier the chamber stripped proposals for government economy from the tax bill. By a vote of 52 to 14, it reversed a decision of yesterday and eliminated a proposal authorizing the president to cut non-defense expenditures by 10 per cent.
 Senator Byrd (D-Va), author of an amendment requiring a 14 per cent reduction, asked that the authorization provision be stricken out "in the interest of sincerity and frankness." He said "little, if anything, would be accomplished through a mere authorization for reductions."
 Also rejected were proposals to instruct congressional appropriations committees to restudy non-defense spending bills with a view to reducing them by $500,000,000 and to require a flat 4 per cent reduction in non-defense appropriations.

Centennial Music Director Himself Accomplished Musician and Singer

Trjo Koski, director of the chorus for the Salem Centennial fairgrounds on July 21, August 1, 2 and 3, has a musical background of which any artist might be proud. Centennial authorities said yesterday.
 Koski began singing in choirs when but a small boy, and has continued his vocal work, both as a singer and a conductor. He attended Itasca Junior college in Colesburg, Minn., where he was accompanist and soloist for the glee clubs and choirs.
 Upon graduation he enrolled at St. Olaf college in order to be able to sing under the direction of the famous Dr. F. Melius Christensen in the A. Capella choir. During his period of study at St. Olaf's, Koski gave lessons in interpretive singing.
 Last summer Koski received a scholarship to study privately with Mr. Kosti Vehanen, coach-accompanist of the famous negro contralto, Marian Anderson.
 Koski came to Salem last fall and was engaged as choir master for the Salem American Lutheran church. He has previously directed choirs in Ebenezer Lutheran church, Minneapolis; and Messian Lutheran and Bethany Lutheran churches in Portland.
 Harry Collins, chairman of the music committee, in stating the recommendations of his committee, said that Koski was perhaps the only logical man for the directorial position because of this fine background and the letters of recommendation received from persons closely associated with him.

Compulsory Youth Labor Plan Is Hit

 tions and uncertainty as to future labor relations are a major obstacle in the national preparedness program; their existence tends to prevent capital from working and providing employment.
 Mr. Roosevelt's compulsory service idea was the subject of much discussion, mostly unfavorable, throughout the day. There was talk of writing a plank on the subject.
 Alf M. Landon, the republican presidential standard bearer in 1936, declared:
 "This is an example of the half-cocked way the president has been doing things lately..." It seems he has to have an idea a day to keep Hitler away."
 The former Kansas governor is chairman of a sub-committee named to write a foreign affairs plank.
 "After Lewis had concluded his speech to the committee, Landon asked for his opinion on Mr. Roosevelt's proposal. When Lewis had made his reply, Landon inquired whether it did not involve 'organization of the youth of this country into labor battalions.'"
 "That's my opinion of it," Lewis answered.
 "For the rest, the CIO leader impartially berated both the republican and democratic parties for their past records on labor and unemployment."
 He warned that if neither party "measures up" it was "not unreasonable to expect that both would lose the confidence of the people."

England, Germany Both Suffer Raids

 detected on their third successive night-covered visit to Germany's busy northwest industrial and shipping section.
 At 3 a. m. (6 p. m., PST) gunfire and explosions a rill were heard in northeast England where bombs were being dropped. The sound of machine gun fire went on for a considerable time after British fighter planes took the air, and the raiders also encountered heavy opposition from ground batteries.
 A powerful searchlight caught one raider in its beam and it made off toward the sea with fighter planes shooting tracer bullets in its wake.
 The all clear signal was sounded after three hours and a quarter in one town in northeast England.
 Bombs were heard again and again. Searchlight beams crisscrossed in the sky. At times the anti-aircraft fire was intense.
 Sometimes the searchlights picked out the dark forms of high-flying planes. Bursts of shellfire were seen around them.
 One large force of enemy planes crossed the southeastern coast of England, flying so high the planes could be heard but not seen.
 Bombs also screamed on the east coast of Scotland. The raiders struck, too, on the east coast of England. British fighter machines hoosed their machine guns upon them there.
 It was the second successive night of the terror of invasion from the skies—a definite commencement to the battle of England, the long-awaited sequel to the lost battle of France.
 The raiders appeared just before midnight, as they had last night, crossing the east and southern coasts. Tonight, however, the invaded area was bigger.
