

The Picture Tells the Story; News Photos From Many Fronts

In this harbor on the French island of Martinique, French sources state the French airplane carrier Bear was blockaded by British cruisers. British action was reported taken to prevent a shipment of American-made warplanes from falling into the hands of the Nazis. Martinique is but 1,160 miles from the Panama Canal.

These giant French railway guns, now in Nazi hands, are shown en route to an unknown destination. It is believed likely they are bound for huge artillery concentrations on the channel.

Among French naval units seized by the British is the submarine Surcouf, 2,880 tons, the largest submarine in the world.

Baroness and Baron Rothschild. Carrying $1,000,000 worth of jewelry, Baron Edward Rothschild, head of the French branch of the famous banking family, and his wife, Baroness Germaine, arrive in New York by Clipper ship, refuges from the war zone. Rothschild's last visit to the United States was in 1890.

For the first time since the World war, the three-inch oaken doors on the state capitol at Albany, N. Y., were closed when postal inspectors discovered a mailed warning that the building would be bombed the next day. Here a state police officer examines the credentials of a draftsman, who finds himself barred from the building on a return from a late supper.

These gentlemen are "Modern Venuses," according to their designation after they finished one-two-three in a beauty contest at Coney Island, New York. Carol Hansen, left, was the winner, with Eleanor Kriscimas, center, and Vivian Mallah, second and third, respectively.

The German censor passed this photo as a warning to England. It shows the destructive effect of German bombs on a French town where a French motorized unit was trapped by diving stukas. "This," says the German caption, "is the kind of war England will shortly get a taste of—the war which she has wanted."

Donald Blood, 14, and Bernard Byrne, 15, wanted to join the Canadian Royal Air Force. They hopped into a borrowed plane at Hicksville, L. I., airport at dawn. Neither had ever been up in a plane before. Gas ran low and luckily the boys put the plane down at Peekskill, N. Y. They bought a few gallons of gas and took off again. Thirty minutes later the plane cracked up in a tree top. The run-aways were unscathed. Juvenile delinquency was about the only charge that could fit the case.

This certificate has been printed by the Republican party as a means of raising a campaign fund. Each sells for $1. Nominee Wendell L. Willkie has let it be known that he prefers small contributions from many rather than a few big ones from a few.

A building superintendent, Caesar Kroeger is booked in a New York police station on a charge of possessing guns without a permit. He was being questioned in connection with the bomb explosion at the World's Fair when two guns and a quantity of German-American Bund literature was found in his rooms.
