"I say, chum," chomp, chomp, chomp, "I say." Well, Maizie, say it. You might as well here as hereafter. "These here, now, bangtails," chomp chomp. "Would you give a girl a tip on 'em? I understand (chomp) there is money to be made (chomp) if a girl knows what horse is going to win. Would you say so?" Do you have to chew gum and talk at the same time, Maizie? "No (chomp, chomp) chump, no. But I choose to chew because the doctor chooses to have me chew. Wanna stick? No? Well.

(chomp) you don't have to get huffy about it. I was only trying to be polite. Tell me about the horses."

Whatever possessed you to think I know anything about the ponies, Maizle? Or that anyone else knows anything about them?

The only thing I know about them?

The only thing I know about them?

The only thing I know about them is that they are notoriously poor investments. Many a man has bought enough horses to put a nag between the knees of every soldier in the Sixth Army and has a sixth Army and has in the sixth Army and has in the sixth Army and has in the sixth Army and has a in the Sixth Army, yet hasn't had kay D, 104-Also a winner in the north. even so much as a bottle of glue to show for it,

"I don't think you know anything about them, (chomp). I'm merely trying to find out how much you don't know, chump." Chomp, chomp.

Missed 35 Cents.

Suppose, Maizie, you know all about them. Suppose you made money yesterday. Suppose you cleaned the parl mutuels, eh? Suppose they won't be able to operate today, eh? Just how much did you make, smart girl? "Well, (chomp), I had a little tough luck. In the first race I picked High Lassie to put my sawbucks on, but when I got to the window I somehow, (chomp, chomp), made a mis-take and put them on Sky Lassie. High Lassie would have payed me 35 cents. Sky Lassie should have stood in bed, And I do mean, (chomp, chomp), horse if she ever sees one. "Likely looking was right. Likely to stagger in to its grave any minute, so I find when they start running. I mean (chomp), when the rest of 'em start running. Last

Knight never started. "But it just goes to show you. If I'd stayed with Biscuit Eater I'd cashed in $4.20." Uh-huh I see you have learned all about the oat burners. Your total investment for the day was cluding the 35 cents on the first race, the 95 cents on the second, the $1.86 on the third (which you marked but didn't bet) and the $2.26 on your last race 'killing,' school.
