determination to keep America out of the conflict abroad. No effort was made to conceal the frankly political nature of the address. Radio time was bought and paid for by the democratic national committee, after some controversy as to the nature of previous addresses.

The endorsement of the idea of seizing and operating industries which refuse to cooperate with the defense program came after Wendell L. Willkie, the republican presidential nominee, had challenged Mr. Roosevelt to state his views.

Willkie opposed the Russell-Overson amendment to the conscription act, calling for seizure of such industries. He said this amendment was dangerous, but added later that he would favor selective service for industry if it were accompanied by definite rules and regulations.

(This section of the draft act was changed tonight in what legislators called an attempt to see that industries were not seized except in case of imminent emergency).

Pumps for Draft of Industries

Mr. Roosevelt noted that congress was about to pass a law for the conscription of men, and added that "on the same principle, no reasonable person can object to giving the government the power to acquire the services" of plants needed for the production of defense items, if the owners of those plants prove recalcitrant.

"The overwhelming majority of our munitions and other defense requirements are now manufactured by private enterprises under private management," he said. "We continue that process. It is only in the rare, isolated case that the owner of a plant will refuse to deal with his government in a fair way."

"But if and when such case does arise, the government cannot stand by, helpless in its efforts to arm and defend itself. No business is above its government, and government should be empowered to do so adequately with any business which tries to rise above its government."

of indiscriminate slaughter and destruction," said the prime minister.

"What he has done is to kindle a fire in British hearts, here and all over the world, which will glow long after all traces of the conflagration he has caused in London have been removed.

"He has lighted a fire which will burn with a steady and consuming flame until the last vestiges of Nazi tyranny have been burnt out of Europe, and until the old world and the new can join hands to rebuild the temples of man's freedom and man's honor upon foundations which will not soon or easily be overthrown.

The king was in field marshal's uniform and the queen in a two-piece suit of almond beige. The king leaned back, crossed his legs and lit a cigarette. The queen smiled all about and a canteen woman bustled nervously to make tea. The tea was still steaming when "all clear" sounded.

"I'm going to wait for some of that tea," said the king. They slipped it from heavy cups marked "police canteen." "This is delicious," exclaimed the queen. "I should never have thought you could produce tea so soon."

After Bombs Come Stretcher Bearers

Out of the ruins of a London building wrecked in a German air raid, British rescue workers bring one of the persons wounded in a bomb blast. British sources said some of the persons injured in this structure were trapped for seven hours before being rescued. This picture was cabled from London to New York.

Pursuit Squadron Is Sent to Alaska

HAMILTON FIELD, Calif., Sept. 11 (AP)—The 18th pursuit squadron of the army air corps is to be transferred to Alaska, it was learned authoritatively tonight, as the first fighting squadron assigned to that territory under the national defense program.

The squadron, consisting of about 20 planes and only recently moved from Moffett Field to Hamilton Field with other elements of the 20th pursuit group, already has received its warning order of the transfer and expects specific orders immediately.

This squadron will be based at Ladd Field, the new army air corps base at Fairbanks. It was not known definitely when the transfer would take effect or just how many men would go with the squadron. An unofficial estimate placed the number at approximately 150 enlisted men and 30 officers.

PENDELTON, Ore., Sept. 11 (AP)—Albert Shipp, 31, of Harper, Ore., suffered a broken back yesterday in a 30-foot fall from the new round-up grandstand.

His physician said Shipp was paralyzed from the waist down. He was removing scaffolding from the concrete base-relief of the round-up bucking horse on the back of the stands at the time of the accident.

Hotel Blaze Hits Downtown Billings

Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson had been guests at the hotel, built in 1902. After the hotel's west wall collapsed, the fire jumped across the street to envelope the old high-towered city hall building, recently occupied by the Yale Oil company.

The fire burned out all power lines serving the newspaper, cutting off its Associated Press teletype printers. Most of the newspaper staff went to work carrying out equipment and furniture.

those holding essential jobs in agriculture and industry. Hershey said the first registrations of eligible men would be taken about 15 days after congress appropriates money to carry out the conscription program. Legislative leaders have said they expected President Roosevelt to submit a request for approximately $1,000,000,000 to cover the first year's cost as soon as the draft measure becomes law.

Safeguards Placed About Industry The conferees adopted a suggestion by Senator Thomas (D-Utah) in fixing the age limit. In revising the "draft industry" section of the bill, they incorporated part of the language of the 1917 draft law and additional safeguards suggested by Senator Austin (R-Vt.).

The house previously had approved an amendment which would give the government the right to take over, on a rental basis, manufacturing plants where the owner refused to give preference to national defense orders or refused to manufacture defense materials. It provided a penalty of three years imprisonment and $50,000 fine for failure to comply with this procedure.

The senate had provided for court condemnation proceedings against such plants. The secretary of war or navy would be permitted to take them over pending a court decision.

The conferees inserted a provision requiring a finding by the president that public danger was "immediate, imminent and impending and the emergency in the public service extreme" before any plants could be taken over. Further, the conferees provided that if the owner of the plant was not satisfied with compensation, he could sue the United States for a just settlement.

A house amendment delaying until after July 1, 1941, the training of any student who might wish to complete his collegiate year was approved.

Senator Sheppard (D-Tex.), chairman of the senate conferees, announced the conferees had agreed on a clause permitting the appointment of a military man as director of selective service, at $10,000 a year. It was believed by a Nazi time bomb. Dropped Sunday night it blew away a corner of the north facade Tuesday, but King George and Queen Elizabeth were in residence at Windsor castle and none of the palace staff was hurt.

King George and Queen Elizabeth kept up their visits of raid-damaged parts of London. One of London's four alarms yesterday caught them on the street, and they sought shelter in southeast London. There they had tea with the poor folk in the shelter.

As Prime Minister Churchill declared the Germans were massing self-propelled barges and other vessels to carry troops to England in the expected invasion attempt, the air ministry reported that British bombers had raised explosives on barge concentrations on the German-held French-Belgian and Dutch coasts, on Nazi artillery nests across the channel from England, on the Calais docks, the Ostend harbor and on Avant and Boulogne.

All of those places possibly would figure in an invasion jump-off. There still was unrest in the Balkans, despite the winning of territorial claims by Hungary and Bulgaria and the new rule of the Rumanian dictator, General Ion Antonescu.

Antonescu announced on the Bucharest radio that an anarchist movement had spread through the country and that he was taking firm steps to crush it.
