

Brigham Young Film Due Here

Mormon Epic to Be Shown at Grand Starting on Saturday

The epic and heroic Mormon trek along a trail of almost insurmountable odds to ultimate freedom is one of the most impressive chapters in the growth of America. Because of the valiant battle they fought to find a place where they could live as they believed, much has been written about them and their leader, Brigham Young. Now it remained for Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief for 20th Century-Fox, to realize the screen potentialities of such a colorful subject. Zanuck, who has recreated many outstanding characters and events for the screen, saw in Brigham Young and his people a stirring story—and decided to bring it to life. The famous Louis Bromfield was assigned to write the story for the production of "Brigham Young," which comes Saturday to the Grand theatre.

Steel-willed, a born leader, Brigham Young organized one of the most astounding mass migrations in history. 3000 prairie schooners, 30,000 livestock... a whole, orderly civilization uprooted... 20,000 pioneers went on the move towards new frontiers. Only the will of some men held them together. That of Brigham Young, who was to have 27 wives, build one of the world's famous cities and found a great state.

The first year at Salt Lake was one of desperate privation. Then, as if the hardships they had endured were not enough, millions of crickets swarmed out of the canyons and attacked their fields. The Mormons, realizing that they could never survive another winter of starvation, dug ditches, set fires and strove mightily to destroy the new enemy.

Brigham Young led the Mormons in prayer! Soon the sky was blackened with thousands of sea gulls, sweeping in five hundred miles from the Pacific ocean to destroy the crickets and preserve the pioneers' food supply.

Tyrone Power was given the important role of Jonathan Kent, Mormon scout in "Brigham Young." Opposite him is beautiful Linda Darnell as "the outsider." Twice denied success in Hollywood, Dean Jagger has returned to the New York stage where he had first made his mark. Last season he portrayed Jesse James in the stage hit, "Missouri Legend." Rugged, two-fisted, a capable actor, Jagger seemed ideal for the role of the Mormon leader, and got it.

Donlevy Has Lead In Great McGinty

Story of Crooked Politics With Unusual Twists at Capitol

Brian Donlevy is starred in "The Great McGinty," comedy-drama now playing at the Capitol theatre.

It is more than difficult to present any vague idea of the nature by a relation of the story itself. The opening scenes in a cheap cabaret in an undesigned banana port town, are merely to make way for the recital by one Dan McGinty—bartender—the story of his life. A product of the streets, Dan literally punches and bulldozes his way into the favor of the boss of the political ring in his city, and rises in meteoric fashion from a collector of graft, to alderman, to mayor and, finally to governor.

Along the line he marries his secretary, simply because only married men can command the important feminine vote. When, later he comes to adore her—a love that is enthusiastically returned—she persuades him to go straight, applying the spoils which the ring has been dividing to the betterment of the poor. His break with the boss lands both of them in jail on evidence which discloses their past depravities. The subsequent details of the descent of McGinty from the heights build the picture to a dramatic, and wholly unanticipated climax.

While it is largely hilarious comedy which dominates the story, there are tensely dramatic scenes, strategically placed, which effectively add to the intriguing interest of the picture as a whole. Inspired casting has given Brian Donlevy the role of McGinty; Akim Tamiroff that of the despotic boss, with a sense of humor; and Muriel Angelus as McGinty's wife. Other featured players are William Demarest, Ailyn Joslyn, Steffi Duna and Mary Thomas.

Old Aumsville Home Changes Owners; Was Landmark to Residents of Town

AUMSVILLE—A house which has been a landmark here for nearly half a century changed hands this week when Mrs. Clara M. Lau of Stayton sold the home and acreage which had been in her family for 47 years to Grace Richards.

Mrs. Lau reports in connection with the sale of the place terms of personal interest. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kirkpatrick, raised their family here. She recalls that the first Aumsville high school consisted of a one year course in 1895 and that she was the one and only pupil. H. W. Copeland was the school principal.

In the summer of 1895, Mrs. Lau, then Clara Kirkpatrick, drove a horse and buggy to attend to the school. She was book-keeping with Copeland who taught the summer school there. Her father died in 1903 and his widow, for many years affectionately known to the Aumsville people as Grandma Kirkpatrick, lived until 1933 on the old place.

Flynn Starred In 'Sea Hawk'

Vivid Days of Piratical Raiders on Spanish Main Relived

All the flaming adventure of the thrill-swept Spanish Main lives again in Warner RBo's magnificent new production of "The Sea Hawk," starring Errol Flynn as the Bold Hood of the seas, now at the Elsinore. Here is the reckless story of the most dangerous buccaneer who ever plundered the high seas—for the greater glory of his queen. Thrills, excitement, spell-binding adventure, tender romance are blended in generous proportion to make "The Sea Hawk" the year's best bet in screen entertainment.

Errol Flynn has seldom had a role that shows to better advantage his magnificent talents and compelling screen personality. He is completely at home in his portrayal of Sir Geoffrey Thorpe, daring privateer who engages in piratical pursuits against Britain's enemies. In this, he has the unofficial approval of Queen Elizabeth, Flora Robson, portrays the good Queen Bess in film, and seldom has the redoubtable monarch received better treatment in the hands of an actress.

Thorpe's plundering activities, directed against the armada of Philip of Spain, one day detain him in his hands Dona Maria (Brenda Marshall), the lovely niece of Philip's ambassador to England, played by Claude Rains. The captive is not proof against her captor's charms, and she comes over on his side as soon as she learns from him the truth about Philip's insidious plotting against England.

She also learns that the Spanish ship on which she had been traveling was propelled by hundreds of British galley slaves, now freed through Thorpe's "piratical" activities.

Back in England, Thorpe makes plans for a daring coup by which he will divert Spanish gold from the new world into the queen's treasury, thereby giving Elizabeth the wherewithal to fight Spain. He sails secretly for Panama, before Maria is able to reach him, the warning that the Spanish have learned of his plan through the traitorous British Chancellor (Henry Daniell). As a result, Thorpe and his men walk right into the Spanish trap, are captured and impressed as galley slaves, and taken back to Spain to face the inquisition.

But Thorpe is resourceful enough to ease out of even so tight a situation as this. Under cover of night he frees himself and his men from the slave ship just after it has docked in Spain. They capture another ship, on board of which Thorpe knows there are papers proving that Philip's armada is going to attack England. This information is placed in Elizabeth's hands. Thorpe receives his just reward—a knighthood and the hand of lovely Maria.
