Modern Lingerie Is Said Adequate

"The modern woman who wears only a few ounces of lingerie is dressed as adequately under the surface as her mother was with six or more separate garments," says Miss Margaret Curlett, Lux washability expert, appearing at Milgrim's all this week.

"Exclusive of foundation garments, the average set of underwear in 1913 contained 13 1/2 yards of heavy cotton muslin," Miss Curlett declares. "Today's slip, pantie and bra combination total only a few yards of silk or rayon. When you compare washing and ironing a vest, corset cover, drawers, ruffled petticoat, and one or more undershirts with Luxing three pieces in the bathroom bowl—well, that's feminine emancipation!"

"Many of today's lingerie styles are based on old-fashioned ones—but have been definitely streamlined. Camisole slips, for instance, evolved from corset

For 18 years he has conducted a plumbing contracting business in Seattle. "His experience in death row and with other prisoners has been used in reaching condemned men from one end of the country to the other for Christ."

covers. Now the modern miss wears them under sheer blouses so the dainty heading and lace show through. Some camisole slips have deep lace ruffles at the bottom too, that swirl bewitchingly under a skirt in action."

Regular Enlisting Not by Board

Handles Only One-Year; Full Terms Go by Recruit Offices

Men who wish to enlist in the regular army, navy and marine corps for the regular terms of enlistments in those branches may do so through recruiting stations and do not have to apply through local selective service boards, Colonel Elmer V. Wooton, state selective service director, announced here yesterday.

Only registrants who desire to volunteer for induction into the armed services for one year need apply through local boards, Colonel Wooton added. The regular branches of the services will not accept enlistments for one year.

Wooton said the regular army is still enlisting men for the three year term, the marine corps for the four year term and the navy for the four year term. Whenever these services enlist men who are registered for selective service they will notify the local boards with whom these men's registration cards are filed.

Men who volunteer for the one-year training through local boards probably will be assigned to service only with units of the regular army or national guard in federal service, officials said.

The navy and marine corps were reported to be filling vacancies only through regular enlistments and not asking for men through selective service.
