

Costume Roles Tough on Cary

Actor Grant in "Howards of Virginia" Frets at His Clothes

America's founding fathers—Washington, Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Benjamin Franklin and all the others of that farseeing band of fighters and spokesmen who envisioned a great nation of free men—were all the history books say they were . . . but they weren't so smart, according to Cary Grant. Else why did they wear the clothing they did?

Currently playing a highly dramatic role in director-producer Frank Lloyd's "The Howards of Virginia," blood-tingling screen epic based upon Elizabeth Page's Literary Guild best-seller, "The Tree of Liberty," and now at the Grand theatre with Martha Scott co-starred, Grant is seen as an earnest, homesick fighter in the American Revolution. Which meant that for more than two months he had to get in and out of the silly things worn by America's founding fathers, tight trousers, lighter boots, still tight or waistbands, ruffled collars and sundry similar uncomfortable habiliments.

Hour to Dress

Usually Cary takes his art and its incidental troubles with humorous good grace, but in getting into a colonial costume was very trying, both from the muscular as well as mental points of view.

"In the first place," wailed Cary, during production of the new Columbia epic "it takes all of an hour to get into an eighteenth century costume, and a good half hour to get the boots on. You grunt and strain for that hour and a half and then what happens? You feel like a silly fool, my friends. You don't dare go out to a public place for fear something will rip and snap and leave you unprotected.

"And do you realize," Cary whispered, "that those clothes were highly immodest? Yes, sir, there are times when I find myself traveling dark alleys to and from my dressing room. But I'm not complaining. I'm just too physically exhausted to complain. Comedy was such a nice business."

However tired he became moulding himself into a semblance of a colonial gentleman, Cary was conscious of the opportunity Lloyd had given him for this test of his ability as a dramatic actor. In the film he plays the friend and compatriot of Thomas Jefferson, and her own Henry and betwixt romantic interludes with Miss Scott, of "Our Town" fame, he preaches treason against the colonial lords and helps unite the colonies in their struggle for freedom.

Sewing Club Has Talk on Hobbies

HAZEL GREEN—The Sunshine Sewing club met at the G. G. Looney home Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. Rudolph Wacken, president, presided at a brief business meeting and introduced the guest speaker, Miss Maxine Buren, editor of women's page of The Oregon Statesman.

Miss Buren gave an interesting talk of "Hobbies." She demonstrated it by showing a collection of china bowls and dogs, belonging to friends, and her own collection of pitchers, which include tiny gold ones. A toy jug, featuring characters from Charles Dickens novels and the quints, a set of five small pitchers.

Greatest City Scene of Film

Cagney and Sheridan Star in "City for Conquest" at Elsinore

The powerful magnitude of the world's greatest city is the vital dramatic force which motivates the action of the Elsinore theatre's new dramatic hit film, "City for Conquest." With James Cagney and Ann Sheridan heading a sterling cast of players, "City for Conquest" moves right up into the front ranks of new season film fare.

Alben Kandel, on whose novel the film is based, has written a solid American story that faithfully mirrors the stark tragedy, the lusty humor, the abject loneliness and the heart-warming friendliness that go hand in hand on the city streets. John Wexley's screen adaptation has shaped the story into expert cinematic form, with pungent dialogue that fairly crackles from the screen, and Anatole Litvak's direction has given the film story the fluid ebb and flow of life itself.

There is Cagney, as Danny, the stocky slum boy, who tries to conquer the city with his fists. There is Ann Sheridan, as his girl, whose dancing feet carry her to fame and fortune. There is his brother, played by Arthur Kennedy, a musical genius who translates the noises of the city into a wonderful symphony. There is Danny's boyhood pal, played by Ella Kazan, thwarted, embittered product of the slums who seeks to conquer with stiletto and Tommy gun. And then there is Frank Craven as the Old Timer, amiscient, ubiquitous, who roams the city's streets, watching over them all and weaves their stories into one symbolic voice of the city.

Comedienne Given Nicknames Galore

Nicknames have been a popularity yardstick in the career of Judy Canova, who is now elevated to stardom by Republic in "Scatterbrain," currently amusing local audiences at the Hollywood theatre.

Every time her career passes a milestone, Judy acquires a new nickname which is plugged widely by her fans among the nation's pressmen.

She was "The Hillbilly Hoyden" when she first came to the attention of sophisticated New York audiences at the Greenwich Village Barn. On completion of her first motion picture she was dubbed "The Feminine Bob Burns," and not long afterwards she became the "Queen of Feminine Buffoonery."

Her latest cognomen, bestowed upon her with fitting ceremony by Rudy Vallee at a Republic press party in her honor, is "The Jenny Lind of the Osarks."

Cactus Cavaliers In Ranger Drama

Fred MacMurray Has Lead Role in Texas Film at Capitol

A trio of cactus cavaliers rode into the Capitol theatre yesterday with a roar of flying hoofs and shrill "Yi-yipees," carrying with them the charm, the chivalry and the explosive drama of the old Southwest, which are unraveled on the screen in Paramount's "Rangers of Fortune."

The characterization of the trio of desert marauders, played by Fred MacMurray, Albert Dekker and Gilbert Roland is the high spot of this delightful film. They are a combination of Robin Hood's gang and The Three Musketeers — thieves, rogues, scoundrels, or knights on horseback as the occasion demands.

Fresh from a scrape with Mexican border troops they bump into a situation in the little town of Santa Mesa that fits their particular talents. A small newspaper publisher, fighting a land grabbing gang, has been assaulted and forced out of business. The battling trio take over for him, and issue a defiance to the land robbers.

In the course of their adventures, Fred MacMurray becomes romantically involved with Patricia Morison. The publisher's little granddaughter, Betty Brewer, abets the romance and proves important in finally establishing the guilt of Joseph Schildkraut as the leader of the gang.

Orchid Every Day Was Rule on Set

Mary Boland Is Provider of Rare Blooms From Private Stock

An orchid a day was the rule on the set of "New Moon," co-starring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy at the State theatre. The orchids were supplied by Mary Boland who, it was discovered, was an orchid fancier with more than fifty different varieties of the blooms growing in the specially constructed hothouse adjacent to her home. Unusually warm weather caused the plants to bloom out of season which meant that each day Miss Boland was able to bring blossoms to the set for ornaments in dressing rooms.

"New Moon," a musical romance of the 1780's, transpires in the romantic surroundings of New Orleans during Mardi Gras. There are thrilling scenes on the high seas and an exciting sequence on a tropic island where Nelson Eddy sets up a republic following a shipwreck. The film is the first to bring the two singing favorites together in more than a year. It was produced and directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

Included in the Sigmund Romberg score are such hits as "Love Come Back to Me," "Wanting You," "One Kiss," "Marianne," "Faroe," "Softly As in a Morning Sunrise" and "Stout Hearted Men."
