

Jefferson Has Cannery Plans

Farmers Union Meeting Called to Discuss Possibility

JEFFERSON—Plans are under way by members of the Marion Farmers Union, which includes farmers in the Jefferson, Marion and West Stayton districts for a cooperative cannery to be located near Jefferson on railroad property near the depot and to be built when plans are complete.

A committee from the Farmers Union including Charles Hart and Art Page of Jefferson, George Tate, Fred Comstock and G. H. Clark of West Stayton, met with the Jefferson Community Boosters club Tuesday night to discuss plans.

They reported that the union is desirous of locating here if local cooperation can be obtained and that consent has already been given by the Southern Pacific company for locating the cannery on their property.

The cannery would be complete in time to take care of next summer's crop and would employ about 200 people during seven or eight months of the year. Ten thousand dollars of preferred stock will be sold. Farmers-growers are expected to take up the common stock.

Jefferson has an ideal setup for a cannery. Enough fruit and vegetables are grown here, and in Marion and West Stayton to keep a large cannery going most of the year around.

Location of a cannery here would mean an increased payroll, employment for 200 workers for eight months in the year, increased business, and perhaps a bank.

The local cannery committee includes E. C. Hart, K. S. Thurston, Clifford Cole, and Delbert Murphy.

Brain Attempts Late Raid in Scio Vicinity; Woman Measures Tracks

SCIO—Oregon weather all but obliterated Mrs. P. Whitehead's bear story, but she managed to preserve the proof.

Whitehead, a bucker for the Lulay logging interests, goes to work before daylight and hence didn't notice bear's tracks between his house and woodshed.

Whitehead, later in the day, discovered the huge prints in the back yard of her home on the Mrs. N. L. Morrison farm in the Bliven creek district 10 miles southeast of Scio.

Bruin, whose tracks had several times been observed in orchards in the neighborhood earlier in the autumn, apparently was a search of his nest. Thanksgiving III before his long seasonal snooze and death of food forced him closer to habitations.

The bear chose a frosty night and his big prints showed clearly on the hoary walk, although his daring netted him no food or fun. When the frost began to melt, Mrs. Whitehead traced the footprints with white chalk.

But then it began to rain, and Mrs. Whitehead hastily covered the tracks with boards. Enough was left of the big fellow's trail to prove his identity when Whitehead and neighbors returned from work in the woods.

Bruin raids on berries and fruits in late summer are common in the foothill sections near Scio, but rarely has a bear been reported so venturesome or out of hibernation so late in the year.
