Decorating Is Slated for Weekend

There'll be many a Christmas light strung, and greenery hung this weekend, and every family will have its own ideas on decorating the house.

Bright ornaments are attractive to buy and use, but it's the families who make popcorn strings, cedar garlands and tinfoil stars who have the fun.

An attractive decoration being used in a house this year are the small fir logs (about 6 inches through, and 20 inches long) which form holders for red candles. Holes, bored to fit, and ends of the log cut off at an angle make the candle holders. They are surrounded by cedar boughs and holly.

The fireplace was center of interest in the house, with a miniature snow scene arranged on the mantel. Tiny cardboard houses were lighted by Christmas tree lights, the electric cord was concealed under cotton snow. Above the scene were many tinfoil stars.

Christmas morning has many traditions to follow and every family has its own. One decoration enjoyed by European families of some countries are the orange Kris Kringles which are made the night before and placed on the breakfast table, one at each child's place.

Use small oranges or tangerines for the Kris Kringles. With a razor blade, split quill toothpicks down from one end, almost to the other, making 5 or more thin strips. On the end of each put a raisin, and stick the other end of the quill in the top of the orange. Put a small candle in the center of the toothpick and light it. This makes a sort of spray, with raisins at the tips to weigh down shredded ends of the quill. Quill toothpicks may be bought these days at the drug store.

Mr. Warren Doolittle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Doolittle, is home from Oregon State college to spend the holidays with his parents.

New Idea Given On Freezing Fowl

Modern quick freezers are taking a page from the experience of Sir Francis Bacon, the versatile Englishman who first froze a chicken to keep it from spoiling.

Sir Francis' experiment of stuffing a chicken with snow is, with modifications, the new method of preservation, says the Frozen Food Research bureau.

In freezing a chicken, the housewife is advised to coat the fowl with ice. This is done by dipping the already-frozen bird into water just above the freezing point, and letting the zero temperature of the deep freezer form a coating of ice over it. Repeated dipping of the fowl builds a protective shell of ice over it that will keep the bird from drying out.
