

Defense Board Has Authority

Knuksen, Hillman Equal in Power; Priorities May Be Dictated

The president, in obviously good spirits anyway, laughingly answered that he had appointed a single head. The name of the new official, he said, was Knuksen Hillman. The two were in absolute agreement, he added, as to what was to be done. He emphasized that neither had been given more authority than the other, and referred to them again and again as a partnership.

Previously a reporter had asked: "Suppose the question of a contract for the Ford Motor company came up and Knuksen believed it should get it for the sake of speed and Hillman believed it should not for labor reasons. Who would dominate?" Mr. Roosevelt replied by raising a supposition that such a case would not arise. Asks Sacrifice of Labor and Capital

The four members of the new agency issued a joint statement which Mr. Roosevelt said was of great importance. In it they stressed the urgency of the defense problem, assured labor that it would not be called upon for sacrifices not demanded of capital as well, and requested the cooperation of all.

To achieve the results which the country expects from the office of production management," the statement said, "we expect and must have the kind of cooperation from everybody that counts. No sacrifice is too great to make if it will contribute to a more successful and more efficient defense."

At the capital, meanwhile, both houses were in recess awaiting the receipt tomorrow of the president's budget message—asking huge new appropriations for defense—and the formulation of legislation covering the chief executive's plan for lending war materials to England.

Leaders of both houses were summoned to a conference to be held tomorrow at the White House or treasury to inspect, it was understood, tentative drafts of the legislation.

Sub-Contracting To Be Encouraged

The day brought two other developments related to the defense problem: The executive urged machine tool manufacturers in a lunch speech to expand the practice of subcontracting their contracts so that the delivery of machinery necessary to the production of planes and other essentials could be expedited.

Leon Henderson, a member of the old defense committee, named to keep track of price trends so that artificial price levels might be avoided, said that unless steel scrap prices are reduced by several dollars a ton, drastic steps for government control would be recommended. Henderson will have a similar function in the new set-up.

The executive order creating the new agency clothes it, in the "formulate and execute in the public interests all measures needed and appropriate in order to increase, accelerate, and regulate the production and supply of materials, articles and equipment and the provision of emergency plant facilities and services required for the national defense."

It can commandeer the plants of what Mr. Roosevelt today called "ambitious manufacturers," that is, any manufacturers who attempt to hold high prices or otherwise prove recalcitrant. Authority for such action is contained in the description law, and its administration was delegated to the new agency.

Moreover, the agency can decide the order in which articles

President Gets Gavel—not First Time

shall be manufactured in various plants to make production schedules conform with the needs of the army and navy. Before issuing priority orders, however, Knuksen and Hillman must consult a priorities board, created within the new agency, consisting of themselves, Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., Donald Nelson, Henderson and one official still to be named.

Otherwise, they are vested with vast duties for coordinating the work of various government branches, making plans for mobilizing existing production facilities, advising the various departments on their purchasing schedules, so that they will not conflict with defense needs, and performing "such other functions as the president may from time to time assign" to them.

As part of their organization, there were established three divisions, one for production under John Biggers, another for purchases with Nelson at its head, and a third for priorities under Stettinius.

At his press conference, Mr. Roosevelt read over the executive order, and interpolated explanatory comments. At the passage which said the agency would have authority to "formulate and execute" necessary measures, he paused, repeated the phrase, advised his hearers to get that, and added that not much more power than that was conceivable.

Bomber Is Flown From Tiny Lagoon

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas, Jan. 7.—(AP)—A naval pilot and co-pilot, only survivor of the original crew of seven, set their 13-ton bomber down on Corpus Christi bay today after an spectacular takeoff from the "puddle of water" on which the big ship landed last week near Edinburg while seeking its way out of a storm.

Lt. J. Murray Hanson, pilot, and Ensign Robert B. Clark, co-pilot, lifted the patrol bomber off the lagoon on the Santa Fe ranch and arrived here at noon.

One of the original members of the crew was killed in parachuting from the ice-laden plane near Big Spring, Texas, Thursday. The four who bailed out at the same time with "only minor injuries" were among 11 killed later in the transport returning them to their base at San Diego.

Capt. Alva B. Bernhard, commandant of the naval air station here, said that Hanson did a "grand job" in bringing the ship out. The runway was "slitcut out" but was not dredged.

From 1896 to 1900 Mr. Lewelling served as deputy sheriff of Linn county. He organized the Farmers' Alliance, was a charter member of Western Star grange and took an active part not only in the affairs of the grange but in civic affairs.
