

Suit Outcome Is Local Talk

Status of City Officials Is Dependent Upon Court Decision

SILVERTON—Street talk at Silvertown this week is settled chiefly on the pending suit between the city of Silvertown and the former water commission set for Friday of this week.

The suit will test the legality of Silvertown's new city charter voted by the people last May, which has been questioned because no provision was made for a vote by non-partisan voters.

Should the new charter be proved illegal it is reported that Eber Allen, who was made mayor by the city council on January 6, would again retire to the sidelines as a councilman.
