Northwest Seed Industry Given Boost By Demands From England, Europe

That Sherman knew what he was talking about when he made his laconic remark concerning war is attested by almost everyone excepting Hitler, Mussolini and the seed dealers of Oregon. That brings you to the point of this story.

Exportation of vetch, alsike clover, rye grass and red and white clover to England has been the salvation of the seed industry in the northwest for the year just past, according to Harley O. White of D. A. White & Sons. This unexpected market was opened up by demand of the English government for increased seed shipments necessitated by the ploughing and seeding of hundreds of small airports, and the planting of vast acres of land which had formerly been hunting preserves, golf courses and parks. Prior to September 1939 an estimated 80 per cent of tillable land in the British Isles had been encompassed in such estates for centuries.

England still buying seed and has been doing so since last May from northwest dealers, White said. Less than two weeks ago the White concern sent two cars of alsike clover for British markets, and various other seeds through out the Oregon-Washington area are continuing consignments, he announced.

An interesting sidelight in connection with exportation as influenced by war was revealed by Mr. White. An order for seed, shipped by White's company and bound for France, had left Portland two days before the German army occupied Paris. As far as is known the cargo still markings time in some Mediterranean port of northern Africa. Between 2000 and 3000 tons of seeds were shipped within the last year from Portland for English markets, dealers estimate.

"The market which had been low, on account of war conditions, was unexpectedly opened up by that same war, and has proven the salvation of that particular industry, helping to move surplus seeds which would not have been marketed otherwise," White said.

Seed Prices Rise
Another angle in which war conditions have aided the domestic seed industry is in the field of the garden seeds, which will demand better than a year ago prices because a shortage exists due to the curtailment of imports. European seeds which had been imported from Germany and the lowlands in general are not finding a way into American markets this year, White said. Cabbage and broccoli, especially, face a shortage.

Add to the exclusion of European seeds by the British blockade the fact that California, which usually produces 80 per cent of the domestic seed supply, is facing anywhere from a 25 to 50 per cent garden seed crop failure, and the inadequacy of the domestic supply is apparent.

In the face of existing conditions most truck gardeners and gardeners of the family garden type have begun buying seeds for this spring's planting earlier than usual. However, the current market will not be too noticeable over the northwest this year, he stated, because most dealers of any size have stock for the current year ordered a year in advance.

line from the Yugoslav frontier to the coast even more exposed to attacks by sea and the wearing down of that line brings nearer the threat of our counter-offensive."

The belief that Hitler and Mussolini had agreed to obtain France's cooperation in the war, by direct action if necessary, was expressed first by foreign observers. They pointed out that the German army were established in Sicily (mainly a base for Nazi dive bombers which have been harrying the British fleet.) They forecast a German effort to operate also from the French island of Corsica; from Tunisia, in French north Africa, and perhaps also from Dakar, the main port of French west Africa.

The activities of the United States drew observations from fascist's editorial spokesmen. Claims Roosevelt Ready To Enter America in War

Virginia Gayds declared that "the sharpening of warlike trends across the ocean" figured much in the Hitler-Mussolini meeting; these trends, he said, "do not pass without reactions."

The official Rome radio asserted that President Roosevelt was preparing to enter the war, but that the American public would "have none of it."

After saying that the Hitler-Mussolini discussion was "a solemn warning" to the United States, the newspaper La Tribuna denounced "those who for business reasons, ideological stubbornness or low calculations inspired by the destructive intentions of international Masonry and Jewry still believe they can interpose obstacles to the advance of the new order and prop up the iniquitous British hegemony."

18 Fishermen Die On Sunk Schooner

Pale Winter Moon Shines on Ice Covered Spars While Death Hovers

BOSTON, Jan. 21—(AP)—One by one, as a pale winter moon watched, 18 fishermen plunged to death in the icy sea early Tuesday as the schooner Mary E. O'Hara, on a main masthead rigging of the sinking schooner Mary E. O'Hara.

The rigging and an even smaller portion of the foremast was all that remained above the ocean surface where the fishing schooner was in 40 feet of water after crashing into an anchored lumber barge on the outskirts of Boston harbor at 3 a. m., less than an hour from home.

Five of the crew, whose stamens was greater, lived to tell the story of the lights of their vessels when the light of their vessels passed, their cries unheard.

Finally, when endurance was near its end, the trawler North Star bore down upon them. Captain Lars Lundre, the North Star's skipper, saw the rigging and fell from his perch, but was picked up by one of the trawler's dories.

Because such formality as "signing-on" is unknown aboard fishing schooners, the O'Hara's owners Tuesday afternoon were unable to issue an official list of the lost. They knew, however, that the passing of five left five women widowed and 21 children fatherless. Many of the others they had families.

The barge, the Winifred Sheridan of Philadelphia, was enroute with two others from Jersey City, N. J., to Rockland, Me., with coal and had anchored until heavy seas abated.
