With Salem Folk at OSC

By ISABEL MCGILCHRIST

Members and guests of Oregon State's 12 cooperative houses gathered in the Memorial Union ballroom last Saturday night for the first dance of its kind on the campus. Among those attending this pioneering dance, appropriately christened "Co-op hop," were Alice Cunningham, Helen Wilson, Carol Minard and Art Wilson.

The northwestern Pi Kappa Delta invitational forensic tournament was held at Linfield college this week, with students from leading colleges of seven western states entering. The contest included debate, oratory, after-dinner, extemporaneous and impromptu speaking. On OSC's representative list were Eileen Holden, Bill Fillmore, Jack Hayes and Quentin Zielski.

Last week OSC faculty members and seniors in civil engineering attended the Oregon section of the American Society of Civil Engineers at Portland, where speeches, round table discussions and appropriate movies were main features. LeRoy Ricketts was one of the students making the trip.

In the present contest to determine the 10 most beautiful girls at Oregon State, Salem folk will be interested to learn that Francis Ann Mott has been selected to enter the finals. Pictures of the 20 coeds surviving the preliminaries will be sent to Actor Tyrone Power, who will select the 10 whose pictures will appear in the special beauty section of the '41 Beaver yearbook.

With the February issue of the Lamplighter, student literary publication, off the press, it is noted that two Salem students have original stories printed in the magazine. Warren Doolittle has written "A Proposal" and Editor Al Harbor submitted "Red Headed Johnny."

At the OSC Dad's club banquet in Portland last weekend, members of Euterpe, women's music honor society, were featured singers on the program. Marjorie McCallister was one of the members of the society attending the affair.

New Fabrics now Used in Making Raincoats

Due to the war, rubber raincoats would have been a premium this year if American manufacturers had not developed some new waterproof fabrics. One of the materials is pliosheen, and is a woven rayon coated with plastic waterproof material. By methods hitherto unknown in organic chemistry, limestone, coal and salt were combined to make a soft-as-silk coating that is waterproof yet contains no rubber. It is also colorless which will appeal to everyone. The other material is called sheer-o-sheen. It is very sheer with a shiny finish. The model at the left, feeding the duck, wears one of this fabric with roomy raglan sleeves, tie strings to hold the collar close, neat belt and weighted hemline. The coat folds into a flat purse-sized envelope of self-material. Center is a pliosheen coat which does not have a shiny finish; next is a small girl wearing a cape with attached hood, and her big sister is modeling another of the coats which come in lovely colors.
