Case of Worker Seeking Compensation for Aggravated Injuries Against Accident Commission Starts

Judgment of $5578 was granted Monday to Duane Effenberger, plaintiff in an uncontested suit against Donald J. Neal and William Winnett Hindman. The decree was signed by Circuit Judge L. H. McMahan.

Effenberger originally brought suit for $10,000 in general and $578 in special damages. Testimony as to the extent of damages suffered by him in an automobile accident which was the basis for suit was heard by the court last week.

Judge McMahan presided Monday at the trial of Hermann Peetz against the state industrial accident commission, at which the plaintiff is seeking compensation for alleged aggravation of an injury originally sustained March 31, 1938, while working for the Turner Telephone company eight miles south of Salem.

He was granted temporary total disability from March 31 to May 6 in 1938, and since that time his condition, according to his complaint, has become worse. Compensation is asked for loss of a leg and for medical and surgical expenses. The trial will be continued today.

Cause of death was believed to be epilepsy, since Rompalla was known to be subject to epileptic fits.

The death was investigated by Marion County Coroner L. E. Barwick, Dr. V. A. Douglas, county health officer, and by deputies of Sheriff A. C. Burk. No evidence of suicide or other doubtful circumstances were found. Rompalla, who was a native of Poland, had been employed by Mrs. Cauworth as a farm laborer for some time. She discovered the body at 1:45 p.m. when she noticed that he had failed to return to work after lunchtime, and had hunted for him in his room.
