Birthday Is Honored in Jefferson

By NETTIE REEVES
JEFFERSON—Miss Louisa Miller celebrating her 85th birthday on Friday, was entertained at dinner by her niece, Mrs. Charles Hoyt, in Silverton. Among those attendin Miss Miller's sisters, Mrs. Lydia Hoyt, 82, Mrs. Ida Looney, 74 and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Emma Miller, 78.

A visit to Miss Miller's home in Jefferson was most interesting. She told of the early happenings of their family. Her father, Charles Miller, crossed the plains from Indiana in 1848, and her mother, Nancy Vaughan, came from Missouri in 1852. They were married in 1854 near Turner and went to his donation land claim of 320 acres two miles northeast of Jefferson.

Louisa was born April 18, 1856. Her first school days were spent in the Institute in Jefferson and she walked the two miles from home. This country was practically a wilderness, with timber and underbrush and her father blazed a trail through the brush so she could find her way to the schoolhouse. The ell tower of the Institute now stands on Main street and is used as a dental office.

When children attended Sunday school they would wear old shoes until they neared the church, then would hide the old ones behind a log, and put on their Sunday shoes.

In 1875 a new house had been built and the old moved to another location to be used as a flax mill.

Her father and Jesse Parrish, grandfather of Jesse Parrish, jr. of Jefferson, won the world award for the best raised. The hank of flax is still in possession of the Miller family.

Louisa and the family looked forward to attending the Methodist camp meetings, Fourth of July celebrations and school exhibitions every year. She continued her education at Monmouth, known then as the Christian college; during the years of 1874, 1875 and again in 1878. T. S. Campbell was principal. She taught school in the Jefferson Institute two years and one year at Knox Butte.

She gave up teaching to assist her father on the farm. He went into raising of Jersey cattle and Louisa attended to the book-keeping and secretarial work for him. Her hobby was oil painting; she has many of her paintings on the walls of her home. Her mother died in 1904 and her father in 1913. All the others died except the three sisters, present at the party. Miss Miller and Mrs. Hoyt live on Second street but still own the family farm. Mrs. Looney lives north of Jefferson.
