Nazis Threaten Red Sea Ships

into consideration in any steps to provide protection for any American ships moving into the Red sea. What those steps might be were secret, but the president has emphasized that US naval patrols now operating over an extended area in the Atlantic also will go anywhere deemed necessary for western hemisphere defense.

In New York, intercoastal shipping operators who conferred with US maritime commission heads asserted they would turn over approximately 20 ships to the government within the next month, and 20 more by mid-July to rush supplies to Egypt via the Red sea.

Thus the intercoastal operators would provide some 400,000 tons of the 2,000,000-ton shipping pool the president recently ordered established for the service of this country and England.

The German warning stemmed from a government already aroused by the extended US naval patrols operating in the Atlantic, and the growing American aid to Britain. The fact that Nazi party leader Rudolf Hess sensationally fled his country to England also had sharpened official temper in Berlin.

The United States was not named in the formal warning but the meaning of the communique was plain—that German dive-bombers already operating in the Suez canal zone intended to attack any ship approaching the canal up through the Red sea.

The new operations zone defined by Germany included the northern part of the Red sea including the Gulf of Suez and the Gulf of Araba, and south to the tropic of cancer.

After Britain wiped out all Italian coastal resistance in East Africa in the Red sea and Indian ocean President Roosevelt lifted the ban on US shipping in those areas. Britain is expecting as much American aid as possible now to be shipped to Africa via the Indian ocean and Red sea on American ships in her fight to retain control of the Mediterranean.

In a copyrighted story in the Montreal Herald Otto Strasser, a former Nazi party leader said Hess's flight confirmed his belief that "within the national fabric of Germany there is a dry-rot at work that will bring the whole Nazi system to destruction."

The people, said Berlin dispatches, were aroused as they have rarely been aroused in the whole course of the war.

At all events one man—a strange and brooding zealot by all accounts—had taken the attention of the Germans and of the whole world away from the current military action of this war.

In that connection, the principal developments were these: In Africa—The British claimed that five axis columns seeking to carry the Egyptian advance beyond the border town of Salum had been thrown back by imperial ground forces and subsequently routed by British bombers.

The Italian high command spoke of "lively actions" about Salum in adjoining Italian Libya and said that a British destroyer had been hit by bombs in Tobruk harbor. Italian resistance in Ethiopia was described as continuing under "sharp difficulties."

An Associated Press correspondent with the British Mediterranean fleet reported that it had returned to an Egyptian base unscathed after repelling one of the biggest axis torpedo and bombing attacks of the war.

German planes swept six times down to the assault over a period of an hour and 15 minutes, he said, but never got near enough to launch a successful torpedo.

In Ankara, a high Turkish official commenting on reports that Germany plans a campaign in the near east, possibly through Syria, said "Turkey will never abandon her British alliance which is mutually profitable," and added that regardless of what Germany does "Turkey will hold her original decisions."

This followed German Ambassador Franz von Papen's return to Ankara from Berlin. Von Papen jovially told Italian, Japanese, Hungarian, Bulgarian and Spanish representatives on hand to greet him: "I come as a dove of peace... I assure you, you can all spend the summer pleasantly at the beaches."
