

Tolerance in News Writing Said Asset by Statesman Editor at Journalism Fraternity Dinner

CORVALLIS, Ore., May 20.—(AP)—Tolerance unmixed with cynicism as an asset in newspaper writing was the theme of Ralph C. Curtis, assistant publisher of The Oregon Statesman at Salem, in the principal address at the Founders' day dinner of the Oregon State college chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity, here Monday night.

parade, met the invaders in a series of bitter fights. Reporting to the house of commons in London, Prime Minister Churchill relayed a message from the British command that "the situation is in hand," but his general tone was that it was a grave story that still had not come to the end of the page.

The island seat of the Greek government—and the Greek King George II was reported staying on it to await the last showdown—is the only Greek territory remaining in allied hands.

It stands as the last considerable barrier to the possible dispatch of Nazi mechanized divisions into the French Syria of the Vichy government and then on toward the Suez and Egypt. That, said some British informants, was apparently the ultimate Nazi plan.

A similar attack upon the British island of Cyprus was frankly expected in British quarters.

In French-controlled Syria and Lebanon — where the RAF continued bombing airfields being used by the Nazis to aid Iraq in its current war with the British, the first outbreak in the now spreading battle of the middle east — the authorities ordered all British consulates closed and their staffs ousted.

This, it seemed, was the last stiff preliminary to a final and formal break between London and Vichy.

In the North African fighting the British reported that a new German offensive into Egypt from the Libyan frontier had been thrown back — and that American-made bombers had a great hand in the result by their destruction of axis tanks. As to Ethiopia, Prime Minister Churchill himself declared that the fall of the Italian fortress of Amba Alaji there had brought to an end "all major organized resistance" by the Italians in the

Liner Normandie in New York harbor

Coinciding with a warning to France by President Roosevelt against the Vichy government's moves toward a closer tie with the Axis powers, the U. S. coast guard took into protective custody 13 French ships in U. S. ports, including the gigantic $60,000,000 liner Normandie. The Normandie, second largest ship in the world, has been tied up at the Hudson river pier since August, 1939. Coast Guard Commander J. S. Baylis, shown telling reporters of the U. S. move, said the ships "are not seized" but that an "adequate guard" had been placed on them "for adequate protection from any outside influence."

per cent of the city's cost of the project. The state is to benefit from the plant by disposal through it of wastes from state institutions.

Proposals of three consulting engineers are now in the hands of the council's sewage and drainage committee and are to be opened at a meeting of the committee this week. Alderman Glenn Gregg, chairman of the committee, said a special council meeting may be called to act on the committee's recommendation on an engineer.

Possibility that West Salem may consider taking advantage of Salem's sewage disposal plant was revealed Tuesday night by Tom Dalke, chairman of the West Salem planning council, who said that the council has discussed feasibility of pumping its sewage across the Willamette river for treatment in the Salem plant.

Dalke said the suggestion had been made to the council by citizens and received considerable discussion. The Salem plant is to be constructed on 14 acres of ground purchased for the purpose earlier near the county farm on the north river road.

All Passengers On Zamzam Safe

Germans Assert Ship Sunk but People Landed in France

The German foreign office, said everyone from the Zamzam was taken aboard the warship, then transferred to a merchant vessel and landed.

These disclosures followed refusal of authorities to comment on American suggestions that the survivors might have been taken to Dakar, French West Africa or to Casablanca, French Morocco (neither of which is known to be German-occupied).

(The Zamzam, which sailed from New York March 20, left Recife, Brazil, April 9, for Cape Town, South Africa. The British ministry of information announced Monday that she was overdue and presumably lost.)

Well-informed German quarters said the press reflected considerable irritation with the United States, charging that influential Americans deliberately misrepresented the sinking as "nazi barbarity."

Germans chuckled over the confusion indicated in American reports, some that the Zamzam sank with all hands and others that she was not damaged at all and was safe somewhere.

"She is safe in the hands of Neptune, and much war material she carried is safe in our hands," said a German spokesman with a smile.
