A BLUE CHOP PLATE makes an attractive background for the plump tender frankfurts, the snowy-white rice potatoes, and the paprika onion slices. It's an easily prepared service with a red, white, and blue motif. The frankfurts are thoroughly cooked, so they need only be dropped into hot water for five to eight minutes. For variety, pan brown in melted butter. To prepare the onions, parboil thick slices, brown in butter, then sprinkle liberally with paprika.

Color and Size of Flowers Depend Upon Efficient Method of Feeding

Flowers and vegetables of first quality can only be produced when the plants have abundant nourishment. Size, color, vigor and yield are all affected by feeding to a marked degree. The heaviest feeding should always be the earliest, for it is at the start of their growth that plants most need stimulation. As they grow stronger and larger, they are better able to forage for themselves.

The spring flowering bulbs, herbaceous perennials, annuals and roses all benefit from a regular feeding program. Here is a feeding schedule to remind you when to feed your flowers.

Spring-flowering bulbs: Such as tulips, narcissus and hyacinths. Feed in early spring when foliage appears, at rate of one heaping teaspoon to one square foot of space surrounding plant. Keep away from stalk of plant and work into soil. Repeat application when buds start to appear.

Established perennials: Such as iris and peonies. Feed in early spring before plants appear, broadcasting plant food on the surface of the soil at the rate of one rounded tablespoonful to the square foot of space. If plants have already made their appearance, keep plant food away from the new shoots. Water in well. Give a second feeding when the buds appear.

Roses: Feed in the early spring at the rate of one rounded tablespoonful to each square foot of space around the bush. It is important that this first application be made as soon as the roses start growth. When the first color shows in the buds, make a second feeding of half this quantity. Feed every 30 days until the middle of August.

Annuals sown directly in beds: Prepare the seedbed thoroughly and apply a pint of complete plant food to 30 square feet of surface area. Rake this lightly
