

Summer Conferences Scheduled By State Education Board to Encourage Vital Discussions

EUGENE, June 12—As part of the continuous program to encourage statewide thought and discussion on contemporary aspects of such subjects as the relation of national defense to education, curricula in the public schools, vocational guidance, and development of educational pursuits, the Oregon state system of higher education will sponsor a series of conferences at the University of Oregon and Oregon State college during the summer months, Chancellor Frederick M. Hunter announces.

On Friday, June 27, with the University of Oregon as host institution, the seventh northwest summer conference on higher education will be held on the Eugene campus with the topic, "Higher Education Looks to the Future."

The two-day meet will feature talks by Dr. George Zook, president of the American Council on Education; Dr. Karl W. Bigelow, director of the commission on teaching education; Dr. Edward H. Lauer, dean of the college of arts and sciences, University of Washington; Chancellor Hunter; and discussions led by outstanding national authorities on education.

The university campus late in June and early in July will also be the scene of the annual summer conference under the general heading, "What the Public Schools Should Teach." The meet will consist of a series of late afternoon discussions to be culminated by a one-day summary and appraisal. Representatives of the higher institutions, public school teachers and administrators will present their respective points of view briefly and general open forum will follow under the direction of a chairman.

Discussion subjects and the various dates of meeting are as follows: social studies, June 19; science, June 23; language arts, June 26; business education, June 30; health and physical education, July 2; fine arts, July 7; industrial arts, July 10; home economics, July 14, and mathematics, July 16. The conference will be generally appraised the afternoon of July 18 and the morning of July 19 by J. Murray Lee, dean of the school of education, Washington State college.

Immediately preceding the opening of the summer session at Oregon State college the conference for teachers of homemaking will be held at Dorchester House, Ocean Lake, June 16 to 20, under the direction of Bertha Kohlhaugen, state supervisor of home economics education.

A nine-day summer school for writers, to be held in Portland from June 23 to July 3, has been announced by the system. Among the writers scheduled are several represented by current books, this group including Nina Federova (Mrs. Antonia Risanovsky of Eugene), author of "The Family," Edison Marshall, author of "Benjamin Blake," Archie Binns, "Northwest Gateway," Ernest Haycox, "Rim of the Desert," Robert Ormond Case, "West of Barter River." The school for writers, which will stress Pacific Northwest regionalism, will be under the direction of Alfred Powers, dean of writing and publishing in the system.

The annual conference of Oregon teachers of vocation (Smith-Hughes) agriculture will be held at Oregon State college in conjunction with the special three weeks course for Smith-Hughes teachers of agriculture, July 7-26, under the direction of Earl R. Cooley, state supervisor of agricultural education.

From June 23 to July 11 Oregon State college will be host to a conference for housemothers, counselors and those in charge of student living groups. The meeting has been planned as a training course for those interested in preparing themselves for the position of social and house directors of student or other living groups.

"Social Conservation through Vocational Guidance" will be the topic of the Oregon State college school of education's annual conference on July 9, 10 and 11. Subjects for discussion and talks include "The Coordination of Education with Industry and Life," "State Labor Census of Defense Industry Occupations," "Vocational Education and the National Emergency," "Tests and Vocational Counseling" and "Vocational Information." The speakers' list will include L. C. Stoll, secretary to the Board for Mobilization of Labor, and O. I. Paulson, state director of vocational education, pro tem.
