Last Year's Brides, This Year's Homemakers

THOSE GIRLS who heard the strains of the wedding march only a year ago, are now maintaining well ordered households, and the drone of the vacuum is familiar music.

Keeping house and meeting one's social obligations fills up a young matron's day, and friends dropping in unexpectedly will find the young marrieds busy with household tasks.

Carol Braden Dashney finds that vacuum sweeper speeds up housekeeping activities in her small house after office hours.

Dorothy Alexander Stadler is known as one of the younger married set's best housekeepers. She frankly likes to cook and keep house and finds the weekly polishing of her beautiful silver tea service a real pleasure.

Last year Dorothy Johnson Martin came to Salem from Portland as a new bride, and made many friends in the past year. Her home keeps her busy between her many social engagements. Here she makes a custard for supper.

Jeanne Raymond Purvine came from Minnesota immediately after her marriage last year. Important among her household activities is keeping her antique furniture and dishes spick and span. Here she wipes some of the beautiful china and glassware that fills the cupboards in her Kingwood Heights home.
