Today's Lesson in Flag Etiquette

When displayed with a group of other flags, the American flag should be at the center or at the highest point of the group.

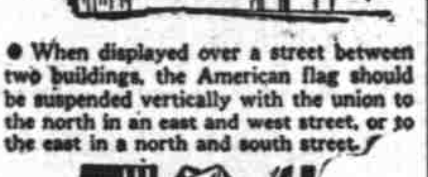

When displayed on a staff projecting from a building, the field of blue should go closest to the peak of the staff unless the flag is being flown at half-staff.

Never display the American flag with the union down except as a signal of distress.

When displayed over a street between two buildings, the American flag should be suspended vertically with the union to the north in an east and west street, or to the east in a north and south street.

When used in connection with the unveiling of a statue or monument, the flag should be prominently featured but should never be used as a covering for a statue.

Well, passing the obvious fact that she has enough sense for two, I suggested that she might be using the wrong kind of oil in it. "But, aren't they all pretty much alike?" she clipped. "Ah, no," I said. "For you see some oils form more carbon than others — that black gunk that ruins the bottom of your motor."

She wanted to know what I thought she ought to do about it. And, as you know very well, I recommended Triton Motor Oil. "On account of why?" asked the lady.

Because Triton is made by Union's own patented Process. It is a 100% pure paraffin-base oil — the finest kind of lubricant money can buy — gives you top performance and top protection.

Now because Triton forms very little carbon it very neatly cuts down one of the causes of sluggish motors. And just to show her how neighborly I am, I got in her car and drove down to the Union Oil station with her and had them drain the crankcase and fill it up with Triton.

Now she thinks I'm wonderful. If you, too, want to be wonderful — get a 100% Triton Motor Oil. Tell 'em Clinton sent you!
