Bread Is in Many Good Recipes

For luncheon or afternoon coffee or just plain good eating serve green apple sauce over toasted bread and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Or serve it with cinnamon toast for breakfast.

A highly nutritious and satisfying sandwich is made by using a spread made up of peanut butter, sweet green peppers and chopped celery between slices of enriched bread. This sandwich is ideal for the school-age child who needs his quota of B-vitamins and iron.

The pre-school age youngster likes his sandwiches made from bread which has been cut paper thin and in small sections. His chubby, little mouth won't go over the larger ones adults are accustomed to. Sandwich fillings for this age group are best kept simple and nutritious. Finely chopped apple, parsley or grated carrot are excellent. Dainty finger sandwiches made with nut bread and spread with cream cheese and honey make an excellent dessert for cool days.

A delightful and seasonal filling for gingerbread waffles is apple sauce made from new green apples.

Deviled ham rolls make an interesting salad accompaniment. Trim the crusts from slices of bread and spread with a ham mixture and roll up jelly-roll fashion. Brush the outside with melted butter or margarine and toast in the broiler until golden brown.

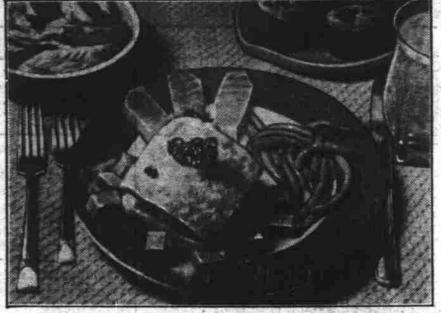

Individual halves of baked acorn squash take on new appeal when stuffed with a mixture of sausage meat and bread crumbs.

Ground beef, browned in bacon fat and well-seasoned, makes an excellent meal when served on toast. Tomato sauce poured over all adds flavor and color.

Bananas Good To Drink

A beverage for the youngsters is this milkshake. BANANA MILKSHAKE

Slice one ripe banana into a bowl and beat with rotary egg beater or electric mixer until creamy, Add one cup milk, mix

A LITTLE DINNER-For a luncheon or little dinner, here's' a combination that is both satisfying and easily prepared. The ham shortcake is made with diced table-ready ham in cream sauce between layers of rich baking powder biscuits. Browned pineapple sticks, buttered green beans, and a vegetable salad complete the meal.
