DU PONT PAINTS from the WONDER WORLD OF CHEMISTRY

Young Genius

Only 10 years old, Kenneth Wolf of Cleveland has been admitted to Western Reserve university as a special chemistry student. The boy's extensive knowledge of science astonished educators. At first university officials were against admitting him because he had never attended high school, but decided it would be unfair not to admit him after he had passed extensive special tests. Both his parents are attorneys.

"Now is the time to expect sabotage," Swenson warned, but he added that the FBI, with 2400 agents on duty as compared to 600 a year ago, is taking all possible steps to guard against it, with the cooperation of thousands of police officers throughout the nation. Numerous regional conferences with these officers have been held and surveys of defense plants have resulted in improved safeguards.

Civilians are expected to cooperate also in reporting suspicious circumstances, Swenson said; but any "direct action" or vigilantism is to be guarded against for it is typical of the European systems which the United States is opposing. He deprecated an incident in Oregon in which citizens threatened to "tar and feather" a man suspected of admiring Adolf
