

Cousins will have a grand time together in a year or so. Seven-month-old Stephen Anthony and his mother, Mrs. Carleton Roth (right) visit his cousin Barbara Ellen (four months) and her mother, Mrs. Edward Roth, at their home.

James, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn H. Woody, finds the camera very exciting. He's six months old.

The Oregonian
SOCIETY

Salem, Oregon, October 12, 1941
 Section 2, Pages 1 to 6

Speaking of Dictators...

WHEN the first born arrives to take his place in the family circle, he's pretty sure of an important role, for few young mothers and fathers and grandmothers and grandfathers, can resist his demands. Tactics vary with the individual, but whether he uses the "bawl" system or the "coo" method, he's a successful boss, and we love him. Pictured here are several first born "little dictators" representative of the hundreds in Salem.

Judith Margaret has an unusually fine supply of grandmothers. Pictured with her are (front row left to right) Mrs. Henry L. Benson, great grandmother; Mrs. Paul Hauser, jr., mother; Mrs. Louise Robertson, grandmother. Back row, Mrs. Sara M. Whitney, great-great grandmother, Mrs. W. J. Hagedorn, great grandmother; Mrs. Paul H. Hauser, sr., grandmother. Judith is seven weeks old. (All photos by Kennell-Ellis.)

Douglas Frederick is only three months old, but he's large for his age. His mother, Mrs. Clarence Hamilton, admires him as he lies in his white crib.