NEW YORK — Once upon a time when things didn't please you, about all you could do was squawk, petition congress or write a letter to the editor.

Now you always have the last resort of picketing. And don't think people aren't availing themselves of the opportunity —

An 11-year-old Muskegon, Mich., boy picketed his home to get a raise in allowance. . . . Some Richmond, Va., swains picketed a newspaper lover's editor because she advised the girls to be chary of their kisses. . . . And some Muskegon Heights, Mich., kids picketed to be allowed to go to a certain school!

In the course of the foreign policy debate, an Alabama congressman picketed pickets who were picketing the White house — and also peeled potatoes. . . . A Santa Monica, Calif., man, invited to a 6 a. m. wedding, picketed the reception with a nightgown, lighted candle and sign: "6 a. m. weddings are unfair" . . . And during a municipal controversy in Montebello, Calif., about judges' salaries, two pickets appeared outside the courthouse with signs: "Do not recognize this justice court—it is unfair to the judge!" . . .

The picketing business is getting quite streamlined. Out in Los Angeles, business got so good that a union, wanting some pickets, had to apply to the county employment agency. . . . Some New York pickets fitted out their signs with lights for picketing at night. . . . And some sand and gravel company pickets in Seattle, and some beach restaurant pickets in New York, did their picketing in boats.

Have you got a spare submarine in case we want to picket any mermaids.

Some pickets try to look mad, but it isn't as grim a business as you might think. Some New York restaurant pickets celebrated their 1000th day of marching with a birthday cake. . . . Some San Francisco pickets, patrolling a hotel fashion show, staged their own picket-line fashion show. . . . And a Kansas City woman who picketed a jewelry store for three solid years developed a beautiful friendship with the store proprietor — until one day when she was late, he called up the union and squealed on her. . . .

Some pickets even get so carried away with their work they forget what they're there for. A Memphis department store picket broke out of line, during a down-pour, to escort a woman customer into the store with his umbrella.

Minnesota's "healthiest girl" was in the hospital with the flu . . . and in Oconomowoc, a sound truck broadcasting about safety was pinched for speeding . . .

In the Yatesville, Pa., elections, four husbands competed for office with their four wives . . . and in New York, a politician's wife bought radio time to reply to a speech her husband made . . .

The Kansas City fire department got a distress call: "My lawnmower's on fire! . . . and the Des Moines fire department was called to give artificial respiration to a monkey that had accidentally hanged himself . . .

In San Francisco, an opera singer dislocated her shoulder . . . and in Hollywood, a Hawaiian dancer dislocated her hip doing the hula . . .

An "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company in Joplin, Mo., got stymied because the bloodhounds became friendly with Eliza and wouldn't chase her across the ice . . . and an 1880 love scene on a Hollywood set was ruined when the heroine's bustle creaked . . .

In Hugo, Okla., a 101-year-old man got a license to marry a 22-year-old girl . . . and just after a Stillwater, Okla., man applied for a marriage license, his grandfather came in and got one too . . .

Puzzle of the week: . . . a South Bend, Ind., woman got a divorce from her husband, her father-in-law, and her step-father, all at the same time . . . (if you can't figure out how that could happen, send in any box top and we'll tell you) . . .

Champ pedestrian of all time: . . . John Hancock of Wichita, Kas., crossing the street, he was hit by four cars in rapid succession—and suffered only bruises . . .

At Burbank, Calif., a seagull knocked down an airplane . . . In Buffalo, police recovered a stolen car three hours before it was reported stolen . . . A tornado picked up a check off a desk in Kansas City and dropped it in a pasture in Mendota, Mo., 200 miles away . . .

And at Jola, Kas., the judge at a bootlegging trial had to order a new trial because some of the jurors sampled the evidence . . .
