

He Learns to Handle Fists

In "How Green Was My Valley" Young Roddy learns the manly art of self defense to protect himself from school bullies. His father and brothers are proud of the plucky lad's determination.

Donald Crisp and mother Sara Allgood give their approval to their prospective daughter-in-law, lovely Anna Lee.

How Green Was My Valley Said Faithful Word Picturization

Richard Llewellyn's best-selling novel, "How Green Was My Valley," will come to the screen of the Grand theatre on Thursday in much the same words as he told the story in the novel.

The dialogue in 330 out of the 356 scenes is exactly as Llewellyn wrote it, reports Philip Dunne, the scenarist assigned by the 20th Century-Fox studio to prepare the novel for the screen. The other scenes are transitional.

"Production Chief Darryl F. Zanuck instructed me, when I started work on the script, to follow the book as closely as possible—not only in story but also in dialogue," said Dunne, "and that is exactly what I did."

The film, which features Walter Pidgeon, Maureen O'Hara, Donald Crisp, Anna Lee and Roddy McDowall, has been budgeted as the most costly of the year. One set alone, which duplicates a Welsh town, cost $120,000.

Also in the cast of "How Green Was My Valley," the 20th Century-Fox film which Academy Award winner John Ford directed, are John Loder, Sara Allgood, Barry Fitzgerald and Patric Knowles.

Philip Dunne adapted the screen play from the Llewellyn novel, and Alfred Newman directed the musical background.
