Insurance Totaled—Insurance on Marion county properties totals $181,900, Henry Mattson, county clerk, has figured. Of this sum, $45,050 covers properties taken under tax foreclosures or agreements with indigents and will not be included in the recently-established blanket coverage policy. Courthouse coverage is $64,800, its furniture and fixtures $30,500; county shops, equipment and buildings, $12,500; Veterans' hall, Mt. Angel, $4,000; poor farm, $5,050. In addition to this the county carries liability insurance on the courthouse elevator and boiler, county trucks, and manufacturers' and contractors' or burglary insurance for which no coverage figures can be estimated.

O., are reported to have reached an agreement for a unified labor organization.

Power Lines Law Sought

The attorney general may be asked for an opinion as to whether or not a 1935 law still on the statute books would permit the state to construct lines to distribute Bonneville power to its institutions, board of control members indicated Friday. The 1935 act would enable the state to prorate the cost of the lines to each department served.

Unless this act could be utilized, there is no way for the state to obtain funds for construction of the lines aside from a specific legislative appropriation.

PGE Crews Battle Elements to Restore Service

PGE Radio Speeds Repairs
"Station KQEB calling car No. 474." "Car No. 474 answering KQEB. Go ahead." "Line down at Central Howell." "Oke. We're on our way." This is an example of the speedy repair work made possible by use of PGE's radio.

PGE's Downtown Portland Customers 'Cut Over'
PGE's downtown customers were "cut over" to a new source of supply when President James H. Polhemus pulled this switch. Looking on is Walter J. Dennis, assistant-general manager of Northwestern Electric Co. PGE is removing its 30-year-old substation on the ground floor of the Electric Bldg. (at Broadway and Alder), as part of a broad improvement program. Removal of the substation eliminated a cause of downtown noise. To serve those PGE downtown customers who require "direct current" energy, formerly supplied from this station, PGE is buying current from Northwestern Electric.

Nerve Center of the Defense Against Storm
Our load dispatchers say this was the busiest spot in Oregon during the ice storm. They locked the door—had their meals sent in—and stayed on the job day and night. This office is the nerve center of an electric system. The dispatchers regulate the generation and distribution of electricity. They have to make hair-trigger decisions—and they have to be RIGHT! Here, W. C. Foster, chief load dispatcher, places a tag on a map of PGE's network of wires, indicating that line No. 57010 leading into Salem is "dead" (out of service)—downed by ice. Switches have been pulled, making it safe for workmen to repair the line.
