Notices Demanded—Separation notices must be delivered promptly to the employer and to the Oregon unemployment compensation commission if they are to be considered in determinations of benefit rights, Administrator Silas Gaiser announced Saturday. A new commission regulation, in effect February 1, provides that separation notices and other disqualification data may be disregarded if they are not submitted within 48 hours. "This measure is in line with a recently adopted policy of the social security board designed to avoid delay in benefit payments to unemployed workers," Gaiser explained.

It is not yet too late to enroll in a beginners short hand class at the Capital Business College. Phone 5987.

Campaign Progresses—The Victory book campaign, designed to provide suitable reading material for men in war service, is progressing satisfactorily in Oregon, Miss Eleanor Stephens, state librarian, reported here Saturday. Approximately 1200 books, previously loaned to soldiers at Fort Stevens, were returned to the state library Saturday afternoon. The Fort Stevens library will be replenished by other books.
