JEFFERSON—At a recent school board meeting, the district board voted to extend the use of the manual arts department for the organization of a national defense carpentry class. This class has been meeting for a week and a half with Irvin Wright as instructor. Twelve young men are taking the class work.

To date the work of the class has consisted of blueprint reading, drawing of plans and making a tool carrier. Other practical projects are to be carried out within the next six weeks.

Students that go through the eight weeks training are registered with the state unemployment service and may be called to work as assistant carpenters on cantonment projects.

The advanced manual training boys have completed ceiling of the shop building, also placing of the base boards, moldings, etc. At present the class is busy laying a floor in the attic to provide lumber storage space. When this project is completed the boys will go back to work on individual projects.

The beginning shop class started active work on projects this week. The first semester the work was on mechanical drawing. For the past six weeks the class has spent in studying hand tools.
