Patriotic Scheme Possible When Morning Glories Are Planted

When the giant Heavenly Blue morning glory was joined by the equally large and beautiful Scarlett O'Hara variety, many garden amateurs who saw the war approaching said: If we only had a white one to match these, we could show our national colors in a beautiful floral display.

The All-America trials for 1942 give an answer to this wish. A silver medal winner in the contest for new flowers is Pearly Gates, a beautiful white morning glory which is reported to be a "sport" of Heavenly Blue. That means that this giant white variety appeared somewhere in a planting of Heavenly Blue; its seeds were saved and they produced some plants which bore all white flowers; and these plants were gradually increased in number until now the arbors and trellises of our gardens can be adorned this summer with our national colors.

Morning glories have long been favorite flowers of the Japanese, but they have only risen to top favor among gardeners in this country in recent years. And this rise has largely been due to the thrilling beauty of the Heavenly Blue variety. One of the few true blue flowers, with a blossom larger than other free-flowering varieties, Heavenly Blue gives anyone a pleasurable shock when it is seen draping an otherwise bare wall with a mantle of beauty, or covering a fence or arbor with its lovely flowers, which reflect the color of the summer sky.

Scarlett O'Hara is almost as free flowering, and its flowers almost as large. It is reported to be a native American species, reclaimed from the wild. It gives just the right proportion of red in a red, white and blue combination.

All these morning glories need warm soil in which to germinate, and they will do well without excessive feeding. If you fertilize the soil too much it may tend to delay flowering, producing vines rather than flowers until it gets around to flowering in the late summer. A good way to start them all is to sow seeds in an outdoor flat after all danger of frost is over, and set the plants out in just the proportions you want, after they have developed four to six true leaves.

New Clothes Make Woman Feel 'So Right'

At the present moment, when almost every woman in America is a career woman, working in some way to win the war, to say she looks "chic" isn't much of a compliment. She wants to look "so right." This is the opinion of the noted designer, Mainbocher, who designed his collection with this in mind. The three pictures shown above are from his collection. The daytime dress, left, is a key print ensemble—white on a black ground. It features the new invisible wrap-around skirt fastened with bows at the side, and deep carnation corsage. With it is worn a sleeveless cardigan jacket of the same material. The printed evening dress is black chiffon splashed with large and brilliant wild flowers. The neck is high and the dress has short sleeves. The winged train may be draped around the shoulders as a scarf. Right is a dinner dress of black lace falling softly over a column slim slip. It is draped to one side and caught with two bunches of buttercups. The removable cape is worn thrown back from the shoulder.
