Hats Go Gay With Color for Autumn Season

Left, double-brimmed, head-fitting hat; right, turquise chenille chapian; center, Scotch green model

Fashionable heads will be bright this autumn. Priority beiges and grays are appearing in the collections with gay contrasts of emerald and red. In a recent style show milliners made the most of exotic shades that they used to spotlight the simple silhouette of 1942. Crowns are high, as notice the double-brimmed, head-fitting model by John-Frederics, left. This one comes in beige, gray-brown, scarlet and steppe green, matched by a chiffon scarf tied ascot fashion at the neck. The small chapian tilted forward over the brow was designed by Sally Victor, and is ideal for the furloough bride. It is made of turquise chenille and matched to a generous muff. Numidi feathers spray from the telescope crown. The little Scotch hat, center, was created by Ann Koppelman, and is made of green wool. It has a high crown, and is trimmed and appliqued with oak leaves which are stitched in red to match the cording.
