

Attacks on Congress Said 'Subversive'

The cries of "isolationist" directed toward certain members of congress before and after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor were branded as of "subversive origin" by Rep. James W. Mott, republican congressman from the first Oregon district, in an address before the Salem Lions club and guests from other service groups at the Marion hotel Thursday noon.

Evidently recalling attacks made upon his own actions in congress, Rep. Mott asserted there had never been anything but unity of purpose on the part of both the executive and the legislative departments of the government on the main goal before the United States entered the war. The president and congress, or individual congressmen may have disagreed on methods, Mott asserted, but never on the first goal, of keeping the United States out of the war, and the second, "getting the United States into shape to conduct war if war could not be avoided."

"All differences of opinion became academic when the Japs perpetrated their snake attack on Pearl Harbor," the speaker declared. "There was immediate unity. Subversive interests attempted to break that unit and ruin this country, but that was a complete boomerang."

Attacks on congress since Pearl Harbor were branded by Rep. Mott as the efforts of "subversive elements . . . that do not believe in representative government . . . and want a government run by one man."

President Roosevelt, Rep. Mott said, "has never given the slightest countenance to this movement."

Decrying idealists' present glowing pictures of the postwar world, Rep. Mott urged that a realistic view be concentrated upon.

"The immediate objective is to render the dictator powers impotent for all time to come," he said. "There is only one thing immediate to do when the war is won; an army of occupation should be placed in each one of those nations and kept there for at least as long as there is any danger of these countries wanting to wage war."

Rep. Mott reiterated earlier statements that from the standpoint of facilities, the Pacific coast is well defended, "in better position than any other coast," but is short on land-based aircraft. That shortage, he said, is being remedied.

Poison Oak's Ban Thought Found in Chemical at OSC

CORVALLIS, Aug. 13.-(AP)—Oregon State college scientists announced Thursday they had discovered a possible specific control for poison oak, the picnickers' pest.

It is ammonium sulfamate, a new chemical weed killer that has been used on poison ivy in the east with startling results.

Lynn Harris, in charge of weed control for the college experiment station, said that while he was keeping his fingers crossed, preliminary results indicate that this chemical, when sprayed on the plants during the dry season, kills the plants.

In addition, the new material is fire retarding and has a beneficial effect on the soil. Because of the war, it is not available commercially.

Home on Leave

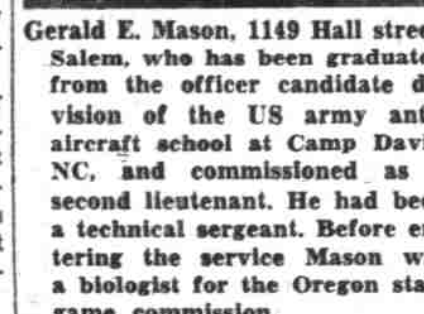

Bill Kelso (left) and Jack Boyd are shown above as they enjoyed a recent leave after a month's indoctrination training at the navy's San Diego station. The boys enlisted in Portland and were sworn in June 28 by the visiting war heroes. Kelso is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Kelso, 1995 South Church street. Boyd is the son of Mrs. Claude H. Boyd, route one, Independence.

Navy Man Drowns

HAMMOND, Aug. 14.-(P)—The coast guard searched Thursday for the body of Ernest E. Newman, 22-year-old machinist's mate second class who fell overboard from a lifeboat Tuesday night. Surfman Donald W. Shaw swam after him in a vain rescue attempt.

Holmes Found Dead in Room, Local Hotel

Wilson Holmes, 52, of Pendleton, Ore., a salesman for the Cronin company of Portland, was found dead in his room at the Salem hotel at approximately 7:15 p. m. Thursday. A clerk at the hotel found the body when he went to his room to see why Holmes had not been seen about the hotel all day.

There were no signs of violence about the room, and Holmes was found in bed without clothing.

Deputy Coroner Virgil T. Golden was called and after a preliminary examination reported that Holmes had apparently died sometime Wednesday night and from natural causes. Three bottles of sleeping pills were on the dresser but were not believed to have been used in overdose by Holmes.

More than $200 in cash was found in Holmes' billfold in his trousers.

The clerk reported that Holmes was a regular tenant at the hotel while in Salem on business and had been staying there off and on for over a year.

The clerk also reported that Holmes' widow was in Mill City and that he had contacted her. The body was removed to the Clough-Barrick funeral home.
