

Cemetery Moving Scheduled For Burial Plots at Adair

MONMOUTH — All relatives, next of kin and others interested have been notified that after October 2 the US army engineers, war department, will proceed to remove all bodies and remains now reposing within all cemeteries or burial plots within the Camp Adair cantonment area.

Two Sinkings

The government will purchase a tract of land, probably near Monmouth, to which the remains of all these cemeteries will be moved and reinterred. Arrangements of family groupings will be followed as closely as possible, maintaining vacant lots now existing in the same relative positions, in the new location, it was stated.

Graves in some of these cemeteries date back to 1850, and many graves represent families whose descendants have moved away, and whose whereabouts are now unknown to local people.

The removal and reinterment of all such bodies or remains together with all monuments, head stones, or other markers will be conducted by a licensed funeral director under federal supervision and in accordance with regulations of the state of Oregon and modern practices, the notice states.

All relatives are invited to cooperate in this necessary action by writing to Elmer M. Peck, real estate project manager, US army engineers, Smith building, Corvallis, giving their consent to such removal and giving the full names of persons interred in the following nine cemeteries: Smith cemetery, near Lewisville; English cemetery, near Airlie; Butler cemetery, near Monmouth; Montgomery cemetery near Pedee; Hefley cemetery, on Fairview road near Helmick state park; Liggett cemetery, on the John W. Liggett donation land claim now the property of Edward Dunnett; Joseph Smith cemetery on Tampico-Airlie road; family burial plot at Lewisville on property of Percy L. Lewis; family burial plot, near Tampico school road on B. A. Folks' property; family burial plot, also on Tampico school road on property formerly owned by Mattie Sheppard.

Judson Jerseys War Casualty As Help Problem Gets Acute

By LILLIE MADSEN

"Milk may be along the first lines of defense, but you can't produce it without help. You can't even produce it with part-time help," says Lewis Judson of Salem, as he is preparing for his sale of registered Jerseys to be held at his Salem home on September 14. Col. J. W. Hughes of Forest Grove will cry the sale and M. G. Gunderson of Silverton is making arrangements.

The Judson home and the Judson name are connected with many of Salem's most historic events. It was Mr. Judson's grandfather, Lewis H. Judson, who came to Oregon as a missionary with Jason Lee. Until his death he remained a missionary to the Indians of the Willamette valley. It was Mr. Judson's uncle, David Leslie, who came to Oregon from the Sandwich Islands in 1837 with the first regiment of missionaries. He was the first pastor of the First Methodist church at Salem, and later the Leslie Memorial church was named in his memory.

Mr. Leslie took up a land claim in southeast Salem, and in 1859 he sold five acres of this for $75 cash to his 17-year-old nephew, Robert T. Judson, the father of the present Lewis Judson. Later Robert added ten acres more and farmed these 15 acres, having dairying as his major occupation. It was on this farm that the present Lewis Judson was born and it is here that he has continued to live.

After completing his work at the Salem schools, he entered Willamette university to study law. But when his father became ill he returned to his home and in 1918, he bought his first registered Jerseys, buying them from Stanley Riches of Turner. From then on, dairying has been his major occupation.

"But when you have to get up at 4:30 a. m. and work until midnight," Judson says, "you soon find your hours are too long and your cows are too many. But I am going to keep four or five cows for the starter of a good herd again when the war is over. The last world war started me out in dairying. This one isn't going to see me finish up, but it is slowing me up. I am going to hang on if I have to do my few deliveries with horse power."

Included in the Judson sale will be the twin cows, Scotty Winesmah and Scotty Fawn Winesmah, two years old last May, and the record maker, Rachel's Whiteheart, who produced 1068 pounds of milk and 565 pounds of butterfat in a dairy herd improvement test for 305 days.

Judson's youngest son, "Bill," a junior at Oregon State college, has passed his physical entrance examination and is awaiting his final army call this month.

TURNER GROWERS UNITE TO ENTERTAIN WORKERS AT MIGRATORY CAMP

TURNER — Bean growers of the Turner vicinity gave a turkey dinner for the pickers at the Turner migratory labor camp two miles southeast of here Thursday night. Two hundred persons were served in the camp's large recreation tent as an appreciative gesture on the part of the growers for all those who assisted in the harvest of the bean crop. Later the tables were removed and a dance completed the entertainment.

The Turner camp, which was installed this year, provides facilities for 140 people, furnishing wood-floored tents, beds, stoves, a laundry, ironing and sewing room, sanitary toilets, hot showers and cold water piped from a deep well. Supervised recreation has been a feature with games, entertainments in the community tent, weekly community meetings, movies, amateur hours, parties and dances.

The camp is governed by a central committee, acting mayor and various committees. A nursery supervisor takes care of all children from two to six years old while the parents work, and all under 18 years are provided a well balanced hot meal at noon, prepared by volunteer cooks. A trailer clinic is available for medical and dental attention with Dr. Theodore Stuckart of Stayton the clinic physician. Sunday school and church services are held each Sunday. Entertainment expenses are borne by the workers who levy themselves 25c per family per week for that purpose. Inspections are made by medical and government officials who have been reported by the camp as rating high.

Camp personnel include J. S. Maughan, manager; Earl Stephenson, mechanic; Lloyd Ewers, caretaker; Anita Drake, nursery supervisor; Lola Ballinger, home management supervisor for both the Turner and West Stayton camps; J. R. Bidgood, US farm placement supervisor.

Rev. and Mrs. Ellis Marshburn of the Home Mission Council of North America have assisted in the activities of the group. The camp came here from The Dalles where its workers were reported to have saved about 90 per cent of the sweet cherry crop, and will remain in operation here for about two weeks.

Among the local bean growers taking part in Thursday night's dinner were F. B. Metcalfe, J. A. Westgate, Ollie McTigert, Leonard Webb, Jr., Harry Juul, Guy Harris, Charles Wertenen, Peter Fredrickson and Leonard Webb, Sr.

Dallas Opens Service Club

DALLAS — The Dallas armory was the scene of an open house and a program Thursday when the people of the town opened a service men's club for use of men in Dallas on leave.

The open house enabled people of the community to see the new club rooms before put into use by the service men. After the opening only the service men, qualified hostesses, and those connected with the operation of the rooms will be admitted.

Junior and senior hostesses are scheduled to be present at all times to entertain and serve the boys. Those who served at the opening were from the junior hostess group as follows: Florence Pinkston, Beatrice Bengo, Elsie McFetridge, Miriam Price, Frances Jo Greenwood, Cecelia Balesen, Margaret Pick, Dorothy Withe, Margaret Lindahl, Laura Marsh, Edna McMillan, Velma Schroeder, Dorothy Fredricks, Martha Jean Kurte, Grace Wahl, Ruby Peters, Emily Brown and Bertha Miller.
