"We are beginning to understand how close we came to being too late," McNutt said. "We are beginning to understand that we can still lose. Most of all we are beginning to understand that this will be a long, hard war." He emphasized that he was "not predicting the length of the war." "It is for the mastery of the future that the victory corps is being organized," McNutt said.

He warned teachers and school officials that it would mean "unscheduling courses in mid-semester" and "offering new courses for which it may even be difficult to find the teachers."

Army, navy, education and civ-Il aeronautics representatives joined with McNutt in endorsing the program.

The corps offers high school students a war organization of their own and a promise that those who join may wear service caps and arm insignia.
