WISE... or Otherwise

By ETHAN GRANT

This is a warning: M'Goover and Prof. Otherwise think it's high time Salem got itself a cafeteria, and we're going to keep howling about it till some shrewd individual with the essential shekels agrees with us and opens one up. In fact, we'll even could bring his boss and his boss's wife. Harry said it would be a pleasure to have them. On Saturday night, Frank and his guests arrived and parked in the side door. During the evening, Harry sneaked out the side door, crawled under Frank's car and unscrewed the motor, the muffler and exhaust with a healthy coating of limburger cheese.

When the party broke up and the guests left, Harry promptly got into his own car and followed. He wouldn't have missed the fun for a hundred dollars. He followed Frank for about a dozen blocks. The temperature was extremely cold and Frank's car windows were closed tight. Harry said Frank slowed down and a door was half opened and then closed again. Then suddenly the car skidded over beside the curb, all four doors flew open and four people dove out simultaneously.

It was the funniest thing, Harry said, he'd ever seen in his life.

Youth Sought For Queries On Robberies

A blond youth who met E. B. Williams, district Safeway manager, in the latter's office Saturday morning with such a bland countenance that Williams did not realize until his visitor had left that there was anything unusual in his having been in the office at that hour, is sought by city police in an attempt to clear up a series of burglaries perpetrated in Salem on Friday night.

Williams said the man, whom he described as approximately five feet eight inches tall, weighing about 145 pounds, smooth-faced and fair-haired, asked him when the Cinderella Beauty shop, occupying quarters in the same building, would be open. The chain store executive at that time supposed his secretary had arrived early and was elsewhere in the suite of offices. Not until the young man had disappeared did he discover there was no one else there and that the offices had been broken into and a desk searched.

A small sharp instrument was evidently used to obtain entry to the office, police said, and nothing was reported missing. A man answering the description given by Williams had appeared at the Cinderella shop Friday night to ask when the Safeway offices closed, the shop's proprietor said.

Similar instrument was used to gain access to Salem War Chest offices in another building the same night, police said. Although a desk and filing cabinet were searched, nothing was taken, H. L. Braden, office manager, believed.

Possibility that the same person or persons had worked elsewhere was seen in the system used to break into room 6 of the Breyman building, where Mrs. C. B. Williams reported that a gold-faced Elgin man's watch with a sapphire in the stem had been stolen during the night.

By an unlocked door it was believed a thief entered the Stewert residence at 384 Hood street between 9:30 and 10:30 p.m. Friday to take a handbag from a chair in the living room. The bag contained rationing cards, bankbooks and approximately $25 in cash, Mrs. Alice Stewert told police.

Florence Erickson, 110 Division street, told police she had left her wristwatch hanging on a chair in the bathroom of her home for half an hour and had not seen it again.

Timely Garden Talk

By LILLIE L. MADSEN

"Shade trees, we want more shade trees!" seems to be the cry this autumn. Rather oddly, in a way, too, as this summer has not been such that a great deal of shade was needed. However, we may need more next year.

Most of the inquirers want trees that grow big over night and then cease growing so that they do not become too big.

Such an order is a little impossible to execute but there is reason in wanting a tree that does not grow so slowly that the shade is all for the following generation.

Perhaps the best of the shade-producing varieties are the oak, beech, linden, elm and maple. These are generally trees of rather slow growth but of long-lived value in the garden. Also they are not too slow growing, if they are given a little pruning from time to time.

The largest of the oak trees is the White Oak which will reach from 60 to 100 feet toward the sky. The scarlet oak is almost as tall and grows slightly more rapidly.

I have a scarlet oak in my own garden which has grown around 20 feet in about seven years, and it was started from an acorn. But it has been watered and fertilized. The scarlet oak is a very lovely tree for shade and its foliage turns scarlet in autumn.

The European beech tree is one of the most beautiful of all shade trees. The Linden tree is also known as basswood and there are about 30 species native to the north temperate zone. The Norway maple as well as the elm tree are so well known they scarcely need mention.

Other trees of permanent value and much beauty are the tulip tree, which has interesting foliage and flowers and does not grow so very slowly; the sycamore tree, the sour gum and the sweet gum and the hornbeam.

But for those of you who have no patience at all in planting and who must have results right now there are the poplars, the willow, the ash and the alantans.

Smaller trees would include the flowering cherries and plums, the flowering crabapple and the magnolias. The Redbud is a beautiful tree of medium growth. Unless it is given considerable attention, its growth is slow, but it does produce some lovely red flowers in early summer. We should not forget the dogwood or the mountain ash. The dogwood planted against a background of evergreen gives a very good showing during flowering season. There are also the honey locust and the catalpa, the laburnum and the chestnut trees.

Planting of ornamental trees which are meant to be permanent features of the garden must be done with great care. The better the start, the quicker the results. During the first couple of years, it is extremely important to see that the tree does not lack for want of moisture. Give it several waterings that carry the water well down to the tip of the tap root which so many have. After the tree has become well established, it does not require a great deal of artificial watering—provided, of course, that you picked the right tree for your locality.

Fall planting is very good in most cases. Have the hole large enough and well prepared. No specific depths or widths can be given, because trees vary so much in size. Set the trees at very little deeper than they were originally growing. After you have dug a deep, wide hole, throw in some top soil and trample this down firmly before setting the roots on it. If it is not well settled, air pockets will result and your tree will be killed or crippled. When it is set, throw in more soil about the roots and wash the soil in about these by puddling. Continue this until the entire hole is filled with soil.

From the Christmas lesson to the end of the year the 21 sessions are to be devoted to the life and ministry of Jesus. Memorization of passages of scripture holds an important place in the year's curriculum and is designed to correlate with the memory work conducted in various churches of the city.

Religious training which gives boys and girls an understanding of the spiritual foundations underlying democratic principles of the United States is provided through Salem schools by cooperative efforts of Salem churches, representatives of the sponsoring organizations declared Saturday as preparations were made for observance of Religious Education week, September 27 to October 4.

Bible instruction in Salem public schools by teachers paid by church groups but appointed with approval by school administrators as to their teaching qualifications begins in the third and continues through the sixth grade. Stories of the Old Testament are told and demonstrated with visual aids to third graders. Math, Physics Enrollment Up At Willamette Class enrollments in mathematics and physics at Willamette university reveal the influence of wartime interests and requirements for reserve training programs.

Dean Chester F. Luther stated Saturday that mathematics courses have increased 60 per cent over complete enrollment last year, while the biggest increase is in physics, with 150 registered in the elementary course as against 25 last year. He laid the cause to the general emphasis on those courses and to the recommendations made by the military board which met on the campus Thursday to advise men concerning pre-induction requirements.

Speakers on the board were Lt. Phillip Bullen, of the army ground forces; Lt. Godman Hilsop, army air corps; Lt. Howard Frame, navy air corps, and Capt. Frank Ward of the marines. Following a well attended morning assembly the board held individual conferences. By suggestion or requirement all the reserve programs have placed emphasis on the sciences, particularly mathematics and physics. The board will return to the campus October 5 and 6 with a medical examining board to make enlistments.

40 Students Sign at WU For Cannery

Willamette students, including 40 women living at Lausanne hall, answered the call of local canneries for labor to help save the late summer fruit by registering Saturday to work in Paulus Brothers cannery. Others aided the harvesting of filberts in the valley.

Dr. G. Herbert Smith, president of the university, expressed his pleasure with the response to his appeal made in a special assembly Thursday. Twenty students applied soon afterward, and the women organized with Lorena N. Jack, director of Lausanne, to work whenever possible. Twelve women were called to work Saturday.

The university has faced its own labor shortage problem, making it necessary for faculty members to do janitor work preliminary to opening school, it was revealed by Walter E. Erickson, dean of freshmen.
