Where They Are What They're Doing

"Where do you get your items for The Statesman's Service Men column?" is a question frequently put to this newspaper's news department by parents and friends of men in service. Others come from the various army, navy and marine posts and training stations. All are welcome.

Sergeant's Wife Inaugurates Camp Adair Guest House

CAMP ADAIR, Oct. 12—Camp Adair's guest houses were officially opened on the last weekend when Tillie Scotland, wife of Sgt. Ken Scotland, spent two days in one of them on a visit from Sacramento, Calif.

The guest houses, supplied with every convenience, provide accommodations for visiting families and friends of enlisted men, stationed at Camp Adair. Guests may stay at the houses for three days—longer when emergency justifies it.

Attractive Mrs. Scotland was "thrilled" by the guest house and the camp in general—talked so much about the wonders of an army camp that her husband, Ken felt slighted. Trilled Mrs. Scotland: "I was impressed that the guest house, service club, theatre, post-office and telephone office were all situated within the block. It certainly makes it convenient for guests.

"My first night I ate at the post exchange and then attended one of the camp's theatres. The next night I had a thrilling experience eating at the mess hall with my husband. We found a table in front fixed up especially for us. I expected the boys to cut up a little at meal time, but was surprised to find them quiet. Was it because there was a female in the room?"

"The same night I attended a dance at the Service club. I was much impressed by the manner in which the dance was conducted. The behavior of all attending was superior to any college dance I've attended."

Sgt. Scotland was an insurance salesman in civilian life. His wife, Tillie, got a job with the tax equalization board in California so that her husband could enlist.

Price Control Not Pleasant Says Stewart

The life of a price-controller is not going to be pleasant—chiefly for the reason that requests for higher ceilings will in many cases appear justified provided they are viewed as isolated cases, without regard to the over-all picture. So observed Dr. Blair Stewart, former Reed college professor now an official of the office of price administration, in addressing a Salem chamber of commerce luncheon audience Monday.

Fundamentally, price control represents a departure from the normal economy whereby production and distribution of goods and services are controlled by the price system. In an all-out war this normal process is not conducive, Dr. Stewart explained, to fullest efficiency; for government would have to outbid private citizens for goods and services and even then could not obtain, for example, full change-over of the auto industry to war production, for some private citizens would still outbid government. Furthermore, government would have to bid so high as to insure inflation.

More rationing necessarily will follow the tightening of price controls, Dr. Stewart declared; and some innocent persons will suffer from incidental effects of this artificial manipulation of industry and commerce—but the losses of some will be compensated by the nation's success in avoiding a worse disaster for all. Dr. Stewart's appearance at the chamber was sponsored by the Business and Professional Women's club of Salem, whose president, Miss Helen Fletcher, introduced him.
