Oliver Speaks On War Writing

Dr. Egbert S. Oliver of the department of English, Willamette university, predicted that the really great writings of the present world conflict are not likely to develop until well after the conflict has been brought to an end and most of the current works will be forgotten within a short time, in a talk before the Salem Lions club Thursday. Dr. Oliver discussed the probable effect of war on contemporary literature. The outcome of the war and the construction of society after peace will be the determining factors in the type of literature which will follow, Dr. Oliver said.

Hillman Reports Baking Conditions

Grover Hillman, manager of the Cherry City Baking company, reported upon his return this week from bread makers conference at Chicago that several changes affecting the baking industry are looming on the horizon. Further restrictions upon the use of trucks for the distribution of bakery products will be imposed and vehicles which carry a load containing 25 per cent sweet goods will not be deemed essential. Hillman said that cellulose is virtually "out" for the duration, a condition which bakery men believe will have an adverse effect on the sale of certain products, at least temporarily. Wax paper is becoming quite a bit darker due to restrictions on bleaching materials.

Financial Statements Filed By Anti-Picket Bill Backers

A financial statement intended to show contributions in support of the anti-picketing measure approved by the voters of Oregon at the 1938 general election, was filed in the state department here Thursday.

Filing of the statement was directed by both the Marion county circuit court and the state supreme court in a suit brought by D. E. Nickerson, executive secretary of the Oregon State Federation of Labor, against the Associated Farmers of Oregon, Eastern Oregon Wheat League, and a number of individuals.

Nickerson contended that the defendants violated the corrupt practices act in not filing a list of the contributors and contributions within the statutory period following the election. The law later was declared unconstitutional by the courts.

The statement showed that the Associated Farmers of Oregon received $32,336.65 from the Oregon business council while the Oregon wheat league received $2000. Total disbursements were listed at $39,331.07.

Henry L. Corbett, listed as a defendant, filed an affidavit in which he said he made no personal contribution to the fund in support of the measure but added that $3000 was contributed by the Portland Association of Building Owners and Managers, of which he is a member. Corbett also said he turned over approximately $600 in small contributions to the late George L. Baker, who was in charge of soliciting funds for the Oregon business council.

Other individual defendants in the suit certified that they had no recollection of where the contributions originated.

A Portland bank affidavit, included in the financial statement, showed that the Oregon Business Council had a deposit of $40,216. Checks were drawn against this fund in the amount of $39,331.07.

Listed among the contributors were the Columbia basin loggers and Columbia basin sawmills.

War Training Here Lauded

Recognition by the war department has come to students in defense training courses here in the form of a telegraphed message from Undersecretary of War Patterson, according to C. A. Guderian, local supervisor of the war production training program in Salem.

More than 3000 persons have taken defense training classes here and there are currently orders for workers in many more war production jobs, Guderian said.

The message from Patterson reads: "The army thanks you for your decision to enter war industry. Our troops in the front lines are depending on the supplies which you will send them. The army knows you will give them your best, so that altogether the men and women at the battlefront and in the factories of America will smash the axis." Signed: Patterson, Undersecretary of War.
