Pianist Gets Critical Review

Lamar Crowson, 16-year-old pianist from Portland, appearing in recital on Friday night at the Willamette university school of music auditorium, was welcomed cordially by Salem musicians and concert goers. The recital was sponsored by the Salem Federated Music clubs.

No better critical review of the young artist's playing could be written, than to repeat comments made following his full length program.

Of him, Mrs. David Eason said "Lamar Crowson played a demanding program, with the assurance of a great artist. Varied moods and changing colors held the large audience entranced. Delightful encores were 'Pastourelle' by Poulence and 'A Little Dance of Spain' by Iturbid."

"Tonight's concert was one of the finest I have heard by an artist so young," commented Dean Melvin Geist, "Seldom does one hear a pianist of his age play with such maturity of style and concept of musical feeling."

Mary Talmadge Headrick's reaction was "It is an inspiration to hear such a remarkably talented young musician as Lamar Crowson. He already possesses to a marked degree, the attributes of a finished concert pianist. His musicianship, maturity of interpretation, and tonal color are outstanding. His program would have been an ambitious achievement for many an older artist."

Miss Alice Cray Brown commented, "I cannot speak too enthusiastically of the concert given by Lamar Crowson, the Portland boy of 16 who handled triumphantly a man-sized program. Equipped with a prodigious technique, he uses it as a true artist, purely as a vehicle for the expression of the musical idea. One is impressed with the depth and breadth of both his emotional and intellectual grasp of the musical thought and the sensitive nuance with which he portrays it. He plays with authority and convincingness of a mature artist. So it is an effort to remember that such beauty is the conception of a boy of 16. Such a very unusual talent is rarely heard."

Mrs. Jessie Bush Mickelson said of him, "His playing of Haydn's 'Sonata' showed delicacy, brilliance and real understanding of the classical composers. His poise, assurance and mastery of the keyboard at 16 surely predicts a brilliant future."

"Lamar Crowson played Bach-Busoni's 'Toccata and Fugue' in D minor with great beauty of tone and rhythm. His phrasing was admirable. One of the highlights of his program was the 'Funeral March' of Liszt, reminding one of Horowitz' rendition. Lamar is a young Horowitz. At the conclusion of his taxing program, he was as fresh as though he had not given a rare performance of each composition. He responded to the enthusiastic audience with two charming encores," said Mrs. Donald Spencer of Portland, who came down for the concert.
