Salem Loses Rating as Defense Area

Salem has been removed from the critical defense area classification, a rating that entitled the community to priorities and other aids to construction of housing, according to Manager Clay C. Cochran of the chamber of commerce.

The change in the city's status resulted from withdrawal of 40-cent roundtrip bus service to Camp Adair, whose existence nearby was the principal ground on which the city was classified late last summer as in a critical area. The transportation committee of the chamber of commerce, which arranged for the cheap transportation during construction of the cantonment decided it was not practical to continue the service, which hovered around the "breaking even" point at peak operation.

Relatively little building resulted from the special rating. If essential war industries should come to Salem, the city might again become eligible for the critical area classification. Cochran intimated that there were still possibilities of such industries being obtained here, as well as one or more in the non-essential class.

George Crile, Surgeon, Dies

CLEVELAND, Jan. 7.—(AP)—Dr. George Crile, 78, famed surgeon-scientist who believed he performed the first direct blood transfusion, died Thursday after receiving 25 of them in recent weeks.

Subacute bacterial endocarditis, a growth of germs which blocked the heart valves, caused death. His physician, Dr. Charles Hartsock, said Dr. Crile had been confined to Cleveland clinic since November 11, more than a month longer than was known previously.

The internationally known scientist spent more than 50 years in research on the nature of life and the loss of energy that attended death, studies which brought new surgical methods and medical theories. He was seriously injured returning from a research trip two years ago when an airliner plunged into a Florida swamp, but recovered from double pneumonia and other ailments to resume his work at the clinic, which he helped found.

Clemency Plea By Wallace Rejected

By The Associated Press
Gov. Charles A. Sprague Thursday denied clemency to William E. Wallace, Portland, who is sentenced to die in the state prison for the murder of Benjamin H. Finkell, who was shot and killed January 8, 1941, on a downtown Portland street.

The governor made his decision known in a letter to Leroy L. Lomax, Portland, attorney for Wallace. Wallace, however, could make a similar appeal to Governor-elect Earl Snell after the latter takes office next Monday.

Lomax contended that Wallace should have been permitted to enter an insanity plea when he was tried in Multnomah county circuit court.

The governor answered that if he granted clemency on that ground, it would be "very presumptuous," inasmuch as the supreme court ruled that Wallace had no right to change his plea to insanity after the trial had started.

The governor added that he could find no evidence to show that Wallace was insane.

Monoxide Gas Warning Given

With many older cars pressed into service to provide essential transportation in war time, the state traffic safety division today issued a reminder to Oregon motorists to guard against carbon monoxide gas during the winter months.

This gas is present in many cars, but normally not in dangerous quantities. It was said, however, in older cars where exhaust pipes or mufflers may be leaky or heaters may be defective, it may accumulate in quantities sufficient to cause death.

To avoid this possibility, the safety division urged drivers to keep car windows open sufficient for adequate ventilation, even on cold days. Another important reason for avoiding the urge to keep car windows tightly rolled up in cold weather, the division said, is that drivers may fail to hear the whistle of approaching trains at grade crossings under such conditions.

Carbon monoxide gas has no odor and thus gives no warning of its presence. First symptoms usually are drowsiness and headache. Victims should be given plenty of fresh air immediately and cases require resuscitation. Carbon monoxide drives oxygen from the blood, thus causing asphyxiation.
