Salvation Army Serves Soldiers in Australia

Since the first US troops reached Australia, thousands of American boys have been served at Salvation Army Red Shield clubs, enjoying all privileges including canteens, writing facilities with free writing paper, sewing and pressing service, information bureaus and recreational equipment, it was revealed here Friday by Adj. Edward T. Hill, Salem corps officer.

The Salvation Army has official recognition by military and air force authorities to perform welfare in base camps and with troops in the field, he said. There are over 160 Salvation Army officers and accredited welfare representatives serving at such points and with field forces in Australia and overseas.

At many Australian camps, Salvation Army officers have made arrangements for cleaning and pressing clothes, altering new uniforms issued, sewing on chevrons, services offered every man "from the colonel down." One US army officer was so impressed with such services he invited Salvationists to attend with the official party at the saluting base during ceremonial parade.

All Australian clubs are in charge of Salvation Army officers who are always available for counsel, including devotional services for men of all faiths. Thousands have attended, Adj. Hill said. US troops have also extensively used The Salvation Army's leave hostels in Australian capitals, where beds and meals are provided at cost, along with lounge and recreation rooms, writing materials, libraries, chiropodists, and many other facilities available without charge.

Snell Backs Scout Week

Gov. Earl Snell is lending his support to Boy Scout week, February 6 to 12, celebrating the 33rd anniversary of Scouting in America.

"This organization through the years," said Gov. Snell, "has been building the many virtues and the qualities of kindly, good citizenship that contribute much toward a greater America. Just now they have been aiding bonds and stamp sales, salvaging metal and wastepaper, spreading information to combat fifth columnists, contributing to civilian defense, all in addition to their usual activities and service. "Tens of thousands of former scouts are now rendering service to their country. They are better men in war and will be better men in an earlier peace by reason of the Boy Scout training."
